American Losses Mount at Dak To

Fighting Rages in 10th Day

SAIGON (AP) — Fierce fighting at hand grenade range erupted Saturday in the jungles of the central highlands and both U.S. and North Vietnamese casualties mounted beyond the 500 mark in the 10-day battle around Dak To.

About 1,000 infantrymen and paratroopers from the U.S. 4th Infantry Division and the 173rd Airborne Brigade fought North Vietnamese forces in close-quarter battles less than five miles apart.

After the fighting tapered off at nightfall, 27 Americans had been counted dead and 243 wounded, pushing the U.S. casualty toll to 83 dead and 428 wounded.

Officers reported 103 North Vietnamese troops were killed Saturday, making a total of 521 for the 10 days of fighting, by U.S. count.

Evacuate Wounded

At dawn today, helicopters were still lifting out the wounded from three companies of the 1st Brigade of the 4th Infantry Division in the battle area about 270 miles north of Saigon. The evacuation of the wounded was hampered by a continuous Communist mortar barrage.

Many of the Communists were reported killed from the massive American bombardment by tactical fighter-bombers and big artillery guns. U.S. Army rocket-firing helicopter gunships also raked the Communist positions.

Early today, giant B52 saturation bombers joined for the third straight day in the aerial bombardment, unloading 300,000 pounds of explosives on suspected North Vietnamese defensive positions, base and storage areas and infiltration routes.

Meet Enemy Force

Recounting the action U.S. officers said that about 300 paratroopers from the 173rd Airborne Brigade ran into a tough Communist force early in the day while on a sweep of an area 12 miles southwest of Dak To. Another 300 paratrooper reinforcements moved into the assault against the dug-in North Vietnamese and also came under heavy small arms, mortar and rocket attack.

Headquarters said several attacks and counterattacks were mounted until the paratroopers overran the Communist positions by mid-afternoon after seven hours of fighting. The enemy broke contact and withdrew to the west and southwest toward the Cambodian-Laos border area.

Less than five miles away, 500 men from the 4th Division made heavy contact while sweeping through a battlefield where they had engaged the enemy on the previous day. The fighting lasted for nearly five hours, before the Communists broke off. But they continued with mortar barrages through the night on the defensive positions of the infantrymen.

A Communist ambush chopped into an armored column.

Random Checks Of Autos Gets Senate Approval

MADISON (AP) — The state, R - Bayside, complaining Senate, working during a rare that cooperation between the Saturday session, approved random parties was "coming apart at the seams," said he would seek a change in Senate rules to allow Republicans to more easily overcome Democratic obstacles.

The measure, part of a four-pronged highway safety package, was passed 23-6 and sent to the Assembly.

The bill contains a unique provision allowing motorists to voluntarily submit to an inspection of their vehicle. If the driver elects to take the test he would be exempt from the random inspection for 12 months.

One-Vote Defeat

Mandatory inspections were contained in a controversial bill as proposed by Gov. Warren P. Knowles last summer. It was defeated by a single vote in the Assembly in the closing minutes of the Legislature's initial 1967 session last July.

The present bill would establish a random checking system instead of tests for all vehicles.

A bill approved earlier this month by the Assembly would have provided for the spot checks and a 55-man increase in the State Patrol.

The Senate version would assign part of the 100 - man increase to operate inspection stations around the state.

Another highway safety bill calling for chemical intoxication tests for drunken driving suspects was delayed until Monday.

Approval of the measure followed a long and sometimes bitter battle between Republicans and Democrats.

Majority Leader Jerris Leonard also announced plans to seek another session of the lawmakers yet this year, likely to begin Dec. 12 after legislative recess for deer hunting season.

GOP leaders had previously said they would adjourn next Thursday until 1969.

Soviets See UFOs, Too; Begin Study

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet government has set up a special commission to investigate reports in this country of unidentified flying objects, informed sources reported Saturday.

The commission was described as under the direction of Gen. Anatoli Stolyarov of the Soviet air force, with an office in Moscow.

Soviet authorities had dismissed UFOs as nonsense when they first started getting attention in the 1950s. The press here did not mention rumors of sightings in the Caucasus, Siberia and elsewhere.

A new attitude was indicated last April when a scientist, F. Zigel, reported Soviet radar screens had been detecting UFOs for 20 years.

Zigel wrote in a magazine article that the theory UFOs were visitors from outer space was "extremely speculative." But he said they had not been satisfactorily explained.

A government commission would presumably gather all data on the sightings in an effort to clarify their nature.

39 Dead Across Islands Filipino Voting Brings Violence

MANILA (AP) — With new violence threatening, 25,000 persons were slain in four anti-Communist, and pro-Western separate shootings Friday in the northern provinces of Ilocos Sur and Abra, and the deputy mayor of a town in Cavite Province, south of Manila, was shot at from ambush, but escaped unhurt.

The campaign entered its final stages and tension mounted. Violence is traditional here where campaigns are fiercely fought. During the 1965 campaign 33 persons were killed.

By constabulary count, 39 persons have been killed and 33 wounded in 92 incidents this campaign. Unofficial casualty estimates run beyond 100.

Sixteen of the country's 65 provinces have been tagged critical, meaning they already have been the scene of political violence. Twenty-one others are on the police "sensitive" list.

Most pundits are doubtful Marcos and his party can score such a lopsided victory.

The Nacionalistas, however, are heavily favored in the race for governorships, which would give them power at the grassroots level. Marcos' brother-in-law, Benjamin Romualdez, former special ambassador to Washington, is running for governor of the central province of Leyte where Marcos had a tough time winning votes in the 1965 presidential elections.

Reuther Raps 'Anarchy' in Wildcat Chrysler Walkouts

DETROIT (AP) — Chrysler Corp. production remained at a standstill Saturday and United Auto Workers President Walter P. Reuther condemned the workers causing the crippling walkouts.

"We're not going to tolerate anarchy," Reuther told a news conference after the union's Chrysler Council recommended ratification of a proposed pact covering 95,000 UAW members at Chrysler.

Violate Constitution

Reuther said the workers who are striking do so without the authorization of the union and in violation of the union constitution.

The Chrysler Council, representing the 95,000 maintenance and production workers at the third-biggest U.S. automaker, "urged and directed" all Chrysler workers to be back at their usual shifts by Monday.

Reuther said ratification votes couldn't be taken until the workers were back on the job.

A walkout by the drivers has cut off delivery of parts to the Detroit plants. The drivers, members of UAW Local 212—the interplant transportation unit, are protesting working conditions.

The UAW's international executive board recommended ratification of the new agreement at a meeting Friday night. Still to be worked out, however, said new efforts would be made in an attempt to get the drivers covering Chrysler's 8,000 UAW salaried workers.

The Swelling State U's

Perhaps the most dramatic aspect of the exploding growth of state-operated higher educational service in Wisconsin is the phenomenal and continuing enlargement of the state university system, now including nine major campuses and two branch campuses, with more of the latter planned.

The latest count of enrollment for the 11 campuses shows about 51,000, which suggests strongly that within a very few years the system may overtake the older and more prestigious University of Wisconsin in attracting young men and women interested in post-high school academic training.

Historically the state universities, which have gradually adapted their titles to their changing and broadening functions, attracted students mostly from their own districts. First they were normal schools, primarily established to sustain a pool of young teachers for the elementary and high schools of the state. About a decade and a half ago, when the legislature acknowledged their enlarging curricula and increasing emphasis upon the liberal arts, they were described as "colleges" by law. Recently as a token of their enlarging activity in graduate instruction, they have been formally called "universities." As their staffs have improved, as their curricular offerings have been enriched, as the University of Madison campus at Madison became more crowded, and as more parents of middle incomes desired higher education for their children, the enrollment growth in the state universities has been epochal. It needs to be said also that per student costs at these schools are lower than they are at the University in Madison and that their regents have imaginatively planned a dormitory construction program without which the housing in some of the campus communities would have been inadequate for their growth.

Today these schools are earning the name of "universities" not only in their broadened course programs, their higher qualified staffs and enriched equipment and plant resources, but they are attracting students from a state-wide constituency.

In most cases the principal origin of their enrollments is from the county of their location which is natural enough. That applies also to Dane County in relation to the Madison undergraduate enrollment at the University of Wisconsin.

Yet it is noteworthy that more than 2,000 students from Madison and vicinity, in Dane County, have passed up the Madison campus this year to enroll at one of the nine state universities. Milwaukee County has dispatched nearly 5,000 of its young people to these schools, in spite of the development of the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee branch there.

The state university at Oshkosh illustrates the broadening basis of service of these schools best. It has 1,290 students from Milwaukee County, 719 from Fond du Lac, 686 from Outagamie, 479 from Brown and 434 from Waukesha. In each instance these students had choices closer to their own homes.

It is not difficult to conclude from recent enrollment trends that the University of Wisconsin at Madison will increasingly devote its budget and staff to graduate instruction, while the principal source of undergraduate education in the tax-supported higher training program will be in the state universities and its branches. When such a development was suggested by some planners a decade or more ago they were called visionaries. But the persuasive proof is now before our eyes.

The 19-Year Beer Minimum

The action of the State Senate in going along with the Assembly on a 19-year minimum age for beer drinking was a political compromise, but we prefer to look upon it as a logical one at this time rather than a disaster. Age 19 generally represents the dividing line between graduation from high school and entrance into college or an occupation. And we believe the Assembly correctly interpreted any attempt to deny beer to 19-year-olds as unenforceable legislation.

The measure as it now stands would continue to grant communities the local option to enact a 21-year minimum, so Governor Knowles' desire to standardize the age limit across the state is thereby thwarted. But if communities like Milwaukee are sufficiently concerned about their youth driving outside the area to drink beer they have the alternative of bringing their minimum age limit in line with the rest of the state.

The controversy over the beer age limit has tended to confuse the real problem, the problem of the drinking driver of any age. Legislative prohibition of the consumption of beer is historically unenforceable. But the control of drivers who drink is a legitimate concern of the state, and once the public decides that this problem must be eliminated the means are available to the state to do so through criminal prosecution and licensing procedures.

On Visiting the Dentist

Proverbial sayings which condemn procrastination can now be put to use by dentists, due to a recent report that delaying a trip to their offices causes more than decaying teeth.

A professor of oral surgery recently told the annual meeting of the American Society of Oral Surgeons that persons who avoid dentists have anxiety that "greatly exaggerates the actual pain experienced." In addition, these patients usually are afflicted with other problems, which could have been prevented by prompt visits to the dentist, he said.

Even with the high-speed drills, pain-killing drugs and other improvements which dentists have added, the repairing of teeth still is an unpleasant experience for many persons. Undoubtedly, even for adults, part of the dread connected with visiting the dentist is simply the fear which can arise when a person mulls over an approaching unpleasant experience.

The observation that putting off a necessary trip to the dentist can cause an anxiety complex is one that seems to be confirmable by observation. But we doubt whether such anxiety will disappear until visiting the dentist becomes a positive or at least neutral proposition, not only from the viewpoint of having healthy teeth, but also from that of not experiencing pain. Then perhaps persons going to the dentist will use the visit to help relieve anxiety complexes caused by other experiences.

'Now We Are Engaged . . .'

It wasn't too many years ago that all the United States had to worry about was an international incident or a threat that war would break out somewhere. Since the war in Korea ended, we have been involved in conflicts of some magnitude or other in many corners of the world.

"Now we are engaged in a great civil war," President Lincoln once said. While the Vietnam war is not only a civil one, it certainly is a great one. And at the same time the United States' involvement elsewhere on the globe has not lessened.

Not a Musical Matter

Senator Stephen Young, who several months ago changed from a "hawk" to a "dove" about Vietnam, has noted that there is a definite lack of war songs at this time. He interprets this as "strongly indicative of how unpopular our involvement in this civil war has become."

Despite the temporary popularity of The Green Berets, Senator Young may be quite right. But it also appears that the lack of songs may be part of the maturing process of Americans.

As Senator Young points out, there were songs aplenty in our earlier years and even at the time of the Mexican War which was also unpopular. But there have been

Ballyhooed Report on U.S. Negro In Reality Mediocre Piece of Work

BY JOSEPH KRAFT

WASHINGTON — The White House has just put out a report on the American Negro which while telling us almost nothing new about the Negro manages to say a great deal about the Johnson Administration.

It says that the administration lacks the intellectual capacity to frame a coherent strategy for dealing with what has been recognized for years as this country's principal internal problem.

Kraft

The report in question is entitled "Social and Economic Conditions of Negroes in the United States." It was prepared by the Departments of Labor and Commerce and issued by the White House with considerable fanfare including a personal send-off by the President.

To get a feel for this report it is useful to compare it with the famous study on the Negro family made by former Asst. Sec. of Labor Daniel P. Moynihan three years ago. Superficially at least the two reports are similar in the categories of analysis — housing, income, jobs, education, health, the family, etc. — and in their findings.

TWO WORLDS APART

But in purpose, energy and tone the two reports are worlds apart. Compare, for example, the way the two reports deal with the well-known fact of an emerging Negro middle class.

The Moynihan report brushes it aside impatiently as a blind likely to be used for obscuring true conditions. It says:

"The emergence and increasing visibility of a Negro middle class may beguile the nation into supposing that the circumstances of the remainder of the Negro community are equally prosperous, whereas just the opposite is true. . . ."

The current administration report, in just the way feared by Moynihan, makes the Negro middle class its central theme, the Big News. It says:

"The data show that large numbers of Negroes are for the first time in American history entering into the middle-income bracket and into better environments in which to raise their families. . . ."

Moreover, Moynihan was at great pains to force out information exposing the inadequacy of existing federal programs in housing, welfare and education. That is why he focused on the family, on illegitimate births, on the number of narcotics users, on the rate of progress of Negroes in school.

The present report, three years later, casts no new light on existing federal programs. Though young Negroes behave in markedly different ways than older ones, it says not a word about generational dis-functions. Though being on welfare is an increasingly prevalent condition — at an all-time high in New York City, for instance — it does not even say anything about the welfare experience.

No doubt there is nothing very startling, or even important, about one more mediocre federal study. What is startling and important is that the White House thought it was putting out a first-class piece of work.

KICKED OFF BY LBJ

Not only was the President on hand to kick it off, but staff members of the President's Commission on Racial Disorders were tipped to the report as the latest word on the matter. Not only was the press specially alerted for the report, but a copy was rushed up to one prominent academic figure who was supposed to use it to impress businessmen assembled in a conference on welfare called by Governor Rockefeller.

The sad fact is that the White House is not now highly sensitive to the information it receives and puts out. And obtuseness in the matter of information bears a critical relation to the President's domestic program.

Information, sophisticated information in fact, is the raw material of political action. It is the essential stuff for catching the ear of the public, for building popular support for new programs.

But information cannot just be allowed to flow from the bureaucracy which is all too likely to justify things as they are. On the contrary, data must be forced out and shaped to make a case for action — the more so when Vietnam commands so much attention.

What the latest Negro report demonstrates to me is that the administration is not alert to these possibilities. It is not using the flow of information creatively. And the reason is not complacency, still less malevolence. The reason is that the administration lacks the intellectual resources to put together the strategy is situation requires.

Spice Attacks Lack Of Action on Jail

Editor, Post-Crescent:

Two actions taken by the Outagamie County Board at their annual budget session this week greatly disturb me and I feel the people of Outagamie County should well be appraised of these actions taken by their elected representatives on the County Board.

It is very disturbing when a government body, supposedly representing the interest of the people, completely ignores opinions of experts and again delays a long overdue remodeling program in the Outagamie County Jail. For the past ten years, experts and "Blue Ribbon" committees have told the Outagamie County Board Supervisors the jail is wholly inadequate for housing prisoners, yet one supervisor gives his reason for delaying the remodeling project because the jail population declined last year. Did this supervisor take the time to see what categories in the jail population declined? If he would have, he would have found the juvenile population in the jail increased substantially and the juvenile facilities in the Outagamie County Jail are terrible to say the least. How can anyone intelligently vote on a project such as this without having all the information from the person who is responsible for the health, welfare and security of the prisoners in the jail, namely Sheriff Marx? He was not even asked to appear before the board and speak on this subject. The vote taken was just another stall for a program where the needs are immediate. If the Law Enforcement Committee was "embarrassed" by the last jail break, they can expect to be embarrassed in the future, and rightfully so, if the remodeling program is delayed any longer.

The second action which was observed with interest, was the salary increase the supervisors granted themselves, with a minimum of discussion, even though Outagamie County supervisors are one of the highest paid groups in this area of the state. The only reason given was so Outagamie County could attract more qualified personnel to run for these elected part-time positions. This is a valid reason and I am pleased with their reasoning. Now, if they will continue to use this same type of reasoning when salary discussions for the full-time employees are brought up, there should be substantial increases for all of Outagamie County's full-time employees who are just as important if Outagamie County is to operate efficiently in the future. I sincerely hope this reason is not forgotten because substantial salary increases are a must if we are to attract and keep qualified persons working for Outagamie County.

Proposal for New University Center Is a Thrilling One

BY JOHN TORINUS

Editor, Post-Crescent

I was very happy to read this week that Outagamie County Board Chairman Esler brought out into the open at the November board meeting a real problem for this area which has received far too little public attention up to this time. That is the vital need to expand the facilities of the Fox Valley Center of the University of Wisconsin.

This need has been apparent for several years. The enrollment is at capacity and there are severe shortages in classroom space, faculty offices and lab facilities. The center has become in a measure obsolete in comparison with facilities now available at similar centers in other cities of the state.

But the future of the Fox Valley Center has been obscured by the drawn out controversy over the site for the new University of Wisconsin Green Bay. And whereas the site question really has little to do with the local problem, it has diverted attention from that problem to the point where it hasn't received much public consideration.

The Center really has a great future in serving the needs of university students of the Fox Cities metropolitan area and environs, needs which cannot be totally met by either the state university at Oshkosh or the new university at Green Bay, or by both.

Dr. Edwin Weidner, the chancellor of UWGB, has made it clear that he conceives of the new university as a four campus institution, with the centers here, in Manitowoc and Marinette closely integrated with the main institution at Green Bay. He sees in this concept a dramatic challenge for innovations in education, a university serving a region through interrelated instruction at locations most convenient to the student.

With proper facilities, junior and senior level courses and even masters degree work could be offered immediately at the Fox Valley Center, courses related to the particular needs of the students in this area.

The main handicap to providing such facilities is the present arrangement under which the physical facilities of the center are owned and operated jointly by Outagamie and Winnebago Counties. It was a good idea at the time the center was built, but the arrangement has outlived its usefulness.

Winnebago County and particularly supervisors from the Oshkosh area are very naturally concerned primarily with the growth and development of Oshkosh State University. Their reluctance to spend additional tax dollars for a second university center in their county is understandable. This reluctance to some extent fails to recognize the service the university center renders students in the Neenah-Menasha area. But it exists, and it is a fact of political life in the relationship between the two counties.

An opportunity suddenly has arisen to end this relationship amicably. The two counties are now involved in a new educational project, along with Waupaca and Calumet, Vocational and Technical Area School No. 12. And the budget for that district, which contemplates assessing taxpayers to build a totally new physical facility for that area school, is causing loud protests from every municipality concerned.

The present center facilities might well be suitable for the area technical school. At the least they could provide a starting point. Turning over those facilities to the technical school district would greatly ease the burden on the taxpayers.

Oshkosh could well raise an objection. The site is not too accessible to Oshkosh on present highways and bridges. But there may be a logical solution to that problem. A satellite operation of the technical school in Oshkosh might make a lot of sense.

The needs of industry in the Oshkosh area in the technical training of future employees are considerably different from those in the Fox Cities area. The specialized courses needed by Oshkosh industry could well be offered in the Oshkosh center of the school.

And if we can all get together and build that badly needed bridge across Little Lake Butte des Morts the transportation problem would be solved.

This would impose on Outagamie County the sole obligation for providing new university center facilities. And at first thought this may cause concern.

But Outagamie County has immediately available county land at two logical sites, the old county farm, and Plamann Park in the Apple Creek area, both of which were proposed as sites for the new university.

Federal funds through the Higher Education Facilities Act could well be available to help with construction costs. Other university centers in the state have received such aid, and certainly a good case could be made for the need here.

Marinette County is embarked upon an ambitious program of expansion of its center facilities to tie in with the new University of Wisconsin Green Bay. A new fine arts building costing $225,000 will be completed by next September, and the Marinette County Board this week authorized an additional $1 million expansion program, including a library-physical education building and two additions to the original center building.

Many of us have been frustrated by the site struggle at Green Bay because our attitude by necessity had to be a negative one. We in the Fox Cities are not by nature negative in approach. We are wholeheartedly behind the new university and always have been.

The idea of building a fine new university center here to tie in with UWGB is a positive approach to meeting the needs of our future college students. It is a thrilling concept.

It is time all of us in this area devoted our thinking as to how it can be accomplished.

Peace Corps Points to Many Successes After Six Years

But Some Lawmakers Are Critical

EDITOR'S NOTE—The Peace Corps has been in existence six years and has cost $467 million. Though its successes far outweigh its failures, controversy still swirls about the program. It has been described both as a noble humanitarian movement and the greatest whitewash in the history of government.

BY TOM SEPPY

Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A young Peace Corps volunteer arrived in the remote fishing village of San Jose in northern Peru, took a deep breath and asked himself "What first?" He decided to persuade the villagers to form a cooperative to market their catch. The venture was successful.

With their new prosperity the fishermen were able to buy engines to replace the sails on their boats and had money to repair the village's electric generator.

There was one hitch to this otherwise happy ending: the volunteer had been assigned to San Jose in southern Peru. He had gone to the northern village through a staff mixup.

"This points up what volunteers can really do," said a corps spokesman. "He went to a village that didn't expect him but needed someone to get them organized and the volunteer made good."

The success story is not an exception. Reports from Associated Press bureaus around the world indicate that during the nearly seven years the Peace Corps has been in operation its successes far outnumber its failures — although there have been some complete flops.

16,000 Volunteers

The corps will have 16,000 volunteers in 58 countries by the end of this year, the largest number ever. It will have 17,500 in an anticipated 66 countries by the end of next summer if Congress approves its request for $118.7 million.

Since 1961 more than 30,000 volunteers have spent two years in some underdeveloped country. The operation has cost $467 million.

Has it been worth it?

"Every dollar that has been spent on the Peace Corps in services overseas has been well spent," Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey said recently. "Not another cent has been required for the new dividends that we have been receiving here at home."

On the other hand, Chairman Otto E. Passman said during hearings of his House Appropriations subcommittee: "This program has been the greatest whitewash in the history of government."

He told Corps director Jack Vaughn "This program is so new and so uncertain, and what it has accomplished is so uncertain, that you are trying to make something out of a program that was cooked up overnight."

Overseas, however, the Peace Corps volunteers are usually praised by host governments and newspapers for the work they are doing.

New successes are being reported as the corps expands the role of volunteers in programs such as poultry production, agriculture, rural community development and health and family planning. But education still gets top priority.

In the health area, a tuberculosis control program in Malaysia is only 11 months old but already is being hailed as a major success. The emphasis was on getting Malaysians to use clinics that have been set up in 30 towns.

Resettle Families

Here's a rundown on some of the corps' other activities:

In Africa, volunteers have worked successfully with local officials to help resettle families on fertile farmland.

In Brazil, volunteers helped to expand a school lunch program to thousands of additional students.

In Thailand, volunteers worked in a program to help stamp out malaria. Considerable progress has been reported.

In India, 250 volunteers are working as nutrition and home vegetable instructors. The corps says about 1 million families are benefiting.

In Colombia, the corps is reaching 500,000 school children through educational television.

In the Dominican Republic,

With every governmental program there are bound to be mistakes. The Peace Corps is no exception. Its successes, however, far outnumber those failures, many politically-oriented and not due to the personnel. The 16,000 volunteers in 58 countries, by the end of the year, continue to pile up an impressive record. From Turkey to Brazil, government officials have high praise for the two-year volunteers who have helped reshape their country in production and economy.

In Nigeria, more than 270 volunteers are in teacher training colleges and related activities. The corps says almost 30,000 Nigerian teachers will benefit.

But in just about every country where the Peace Corps can point to successes, failures can usually be found—most of them in urban community development.

"If we could do things differently, we would have sent fewer volunteers to the urban areas of Latin America," says Vaughn, who in March, 1966, took over the $28,500-a-year directorship from the first head, Sargent Shriver. "The farther out of the cities the Peace Corps gets, the better off we will be."

One of the big reasons for the failures was the frustration felt by the volunteer because —not given a specific task—he did not know what to do. Another difficulty was the inability to define a "community" in a large city's slums made up of a changing population of unskilled jobseekers. The city volunteer also lacks status.

His rural counterpart may be the only foreigner who has ever lived in a village. But the city volunteer usually is just a face in the crowd.

Volunteers in Ecuador worked as assistants to city planners and helped out in city agencies. Then came a change in city administration. The new officials didn't know what the volunteers were doing and didn't want them. So the volunteers packed up and left.

Come Long Ways

Volunteers were assigned to hospitals in Tunisia to teach nursing. With few exceptions, they had frustrating experiences. They were used as ward nurses and in other routine jobs before the program fizzled out and was dropped.

Despite such failures, the corps—conceived amid criticism, skepticism, disbelief and fear—has come a long way since it was created by President John F. Kennedy in March 1961.

By law, it has three goals: to help underdeveloped countries meet their needs for trained manpower; to help promote better understanding of the American people in those countries; to help promote better understanding of other peoples by the American people.

There are many who believe the corps' greatest successes lie in the last two goals, which are nearly impossible to gauge.

Initial public response to the corps was largely favorable. But skeptics were not hard to find.

Overseas, the corps heard charges—mostly from Communists and Communist-oriented newspapers—that the volunteers were spies and representatives of the Central Intelligence Agency. Such charges were made again this year in Latin America, Africa and India.

Involved in Politics

"The Big Lie has been with us since 1961 when we sent our first volunteer overseas," said Vaughn. "We don't try to fight it with words. We just point to our accomplishments. This usually explodes the charges in any community."

The corps also continues to get caught up in the political crossfires of countries in which it serves. Last year, the agency was asked to leave Guinea—the first time such a request was made—because of internal politics.

Pakistan, which also ended its Peace Corps program, said it wanted higher skills than the volunteers have. But it is believed the real reasons were political.

Other countries that have asked the corps to leave for political reasons include Ceylon, where a new government has invited it back; Indonesia under Sukarno and Mauritania during last summer's Middle East crisis.

The Peace Corps has never been known to hide its successes but is quick to acknowledge its mistakes and tries to rectify them.

"We're learning how to do things better," said Vaughn. "We're giving the volunteers better training, we've got better staffs and we're asking host countries to make long range plans on what they think their needs will be."

"We have some past experience to go on now. We are getting lots of help from returning volunteers who tell us the problems they encountered and then we try to pass this on to the new trainees. Former volunteers are doing the recruiting, the training and running programs."

There have been many changes in the Peace Corps since the first 51 volunteers went into training July 3, 1961, and then began duty in Ghana Aug. 30 of that year. Many of those have involved training and recruiting of volunteers.

In recruiting, the Peace Corps has zeroed in on the college graduate with a bachelor's degree — better known around the agency as the "BA Generalist."

With the move to attract the recent college graduate, the average age of the volunteers has dropped. In 1963, 9.51 per cent were 30 or older. This year, only 3.2 per cent are in that age bracket. The 21-25 year bracket now includes 81.8 per cent of the volunteers.

One trend note: More married couples are volunteers. One out of every five volunteers is married now compared to one out of every 10 five years ago.

What happens to the volunteers once they complete their Peace Corps tour?

Nearly four out of 10, 37 per cent continue their education; 19.6 per cent become teachers; 12.2 per cent work for the federal government; 10.2 per cent go into private industry; 7 per cent work for nonprivate organizations and 4.1 per cent are employed by state or local governments. The remainder become housewives, enter military service or retire.

It is clear that some very high-grade, high gear and highly motivated talent is becoming available in the U.S. in increasing number," Vaughn says. "For these same people who saw in Peace Corps service an expression of themselves are finding the same opportunity at home. Our nation will be the better for it."

Colony's Birth Rate Hits All-Time Low

SUVA, Fiji (AP) — The Fiji Family Planning association reported some success in its efforts to reduce this colony's high birth rate.

It said in its annual report that attendances at the British colony's family planning clinics were good in 1966 when the birth rate was 34.87 per 1,000 of population. Ten years ago the rate was 41.91.

The association said its target was to reduce the rate to 25 per 1,000. (Rate in the United States in 1965 was 19.4 per 1,000.)

LBJ Aide Denies Being an 'Intellectual-in-Residence'

EDITOR'S NOTE—John Roche is a kind of ambassador-without-portfolio to the strange Land of the Intelligensia. After spending 20 years in the academic world, he now serves as liaison man between the President and that community, but he objects to the tag "intellectual-in-residence." He considers himself just "another eye, another ear" for the top man in the White House.

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — When the telephone has that certain ring, John P. Roche sheds his nonchalant, almost offhand manner, pushes the proper button and snaps out a most respectful, "Yes, sir."

He listens, says, "That's my judgment, sir," hangs up without a goodbye and becomes easygoing John Roche again.

The caller was the President of the United States. Roche is one of his special consultants and widely regarded as LBJ's "intellectual-in-residence."

He probably got that way through the old saw that if it looks like one, talks like one and acts like one, it probably is one. Roche denies he is anything of the sort.

"First, I don't think there is such a job as a presidential hand-holder whose job it is to go out and hold hands with the intellectuals," he says. "And second, if there were such a job, I think my critics were absolutely correct—I'm not the man for it. Because I don't happen to take the pretensions of the intelligensia very seriously."

Likes Academic World

"I spent 20 years in the academic universe and I'm very fond of these people. I have a very high regard for their capacity to write short stories and poems, but over the years, it seems to me they were almost unerringly wrong in their attitude on international affairs."

"Fortunately we've managed to survive in the past and I think we'll survive the criticism on Vietnam."

Those criticisms have been virulent from many in the intellectual community. As a member of that community—even without White House portfolio as liaison man—how does he get the administration point of view to them? "Basically there's no point in answering all of this criticism because it's not fundamentally directed as criticism," says Roche. "It's a form of religious behavior, eccentric religious behavior."

What it amounts to is a group of people standing around sticking pins into a little was image named Lyndon Johnson. It has no particular political sense. The only answer the President really could have to make these people happy is, I suppose, if he blew his brains out. But nothing short of that."

Was at Brandeis

Roche, 44, got the intellectual-in-residence label when he was plucked from his post as chairman of the Brandeis University department of politics and was installed in the White House, one floor above and a dozen steps north of the President's office. His arrival coincided with the testy departure of his predecessor, Eric Gold-

When the President of the United States wants special information, one of the consultants to whom he turns is John Roche, considered the "intellectual-in-residence" at the White House. Roche, who left his job as chairman of the political science department, Brandeis University, for his current position, was also Hubert Humphrey's speechwriter in 1964 and chairman of the Americans for Democratic Action for three years. In his office at the White House, Washington, D.C., he spends his days relaxing and reading, forming from the many sources available the information which can guide the decisions of the President. (AP Newsfeatures Photo) man, and that, Roche says, got him the name.

That was in September last year. A columnist commented Roche was "known chiefly as an Irishman who taught at a Jewish university and a liberal who supports the President on Vietnam."

His credentials are somewhat broader. He was chairman from 1962 to 1965 of the Americans for Democratic Action and he wrote Hubert H. Humphrey's speeches in the 1964 presidential campaign.

Another Eye, Ear

There are no "neat little boxes" of responsibilities for White House advisers, Roche says. He contributes to the speech writing for the President and in general spends "a great deal of time just trying to figure out what can happen, what can go wrong, what kind of things you have to worry about." He is in demand as a speaker and as an insider who can explain why the White House did or did not do this or that.

"I'm simply another eye, another ear for the President," Roche says. As such, he spends "about three or four hours a day doing nothing but being probably one of the best-read men in the government on problems of Vietnam." When the President calls for his opinion or for a fact-finding task—as often as a half dozen times a day—a special strident ring tells him who is on the line. If in his readings Roche comes across something of special interest, he shoots off memos or communicates his views at top-level staff meetings.

There were published reports that Goldman quit because he felt there was no way to bring intellectuals and the President together.

"Look," said Roche impatiently, "this building is full of intellectuals. I don't think the President has any difficulty in communicating with them or any other intellectuals except for the holy roller wing, who are not interested in communicating in any case."

People's Forum

Editor, Post-Crescent:

I read with interest the letter in the People's Forum by one Caryl Milliren on Sunday, November 5th. It is indeed rare to see one letter filled with so much misinformation and confused facts. Miss (or is it "Mr.") — I can't tell from the name — said that "Mayor Buckley's statement that the present vocational school operated at $28,000 last year is quite ridiculous." I was present when the Mayor made the statement and he said that the "levy against Appleton was $28,000" — not that the school operated on that amount. Incidentally, the Mayor was wrong on the amount, too — but I suppose it is difficult to keep hundreds of different figures in one's mind. A check with Mr. Henry Schreive revealed the facts are these: In 1967 the Vocational School levy was $27,861 for operating expenses plus $9,929 for debt service, representing a gross levy of $37,790. $4,726 of this was charged back to the district leaving a net levy against the City of Appleton of $33,064 for 1967.

The Vocational School levy for 1968 is $376,478! More than 10 times last year's levy! I don't blame Mayor Buckley for fighting this back-breaking tax increase against the people of Appleton and I hope he continues the fight.

It is also interesting to note that Miss Milliren signed her address as Route 6, Appleton. The Post Office advises that this is in the Town of Greenville. No wonder she doesn't care what Appleton taxes are — she doesn't have to pay them. We do.

Points His Finger; Almost Buys a Steer

DENVER (AP) — A process server, Calvin Smith, went to a stockyard auction to serve a complaint and became an unwilling bidder for an Angus calf.

When Smith pointed his finger at the man to whom he wanted to hand the subpoena, the auctioneer called, "I'm bid $400." But Smith didn't have to buy the calf—someone else bid $500.

Switching of Television Movies Angers Viewer

Editor, Post-Crescent:

All week I had anticipated the broadcast of J. P. Miller's "Days of Wine and Roses."

As I scanned the Thursday evening schedule in TV Guide I noticed that Channel 2 had again pulled the old switchero.

Rather than watching one of the finest films of the early 60's we were treated to a 1955 vintage war movie.

This is not the first time this has occurred. A number of weeks ago while the rest of the nation watched "Splendor in the Grass" — a highly lauded film — we saw a class B adventure movie.

I think it is time the management of WBAY-TV took a look at their program schedule.

Why should residents of this area have to put up with second-rate entertainment while the rest of the nation enjoys some of TV's finer moments?

BY WILLIAM L. RYAN

AP Special Correspondent

Are the United States and the Soviet Union, the two most powerful nations in all history, rounding failures as great powers?

Fifty years have passed since communism seized power in Russia. The anniversary finds the Russians and their chief antagonists in today's world, the Americans, engaged in soul-searching.

In that half century, the Russians sought hungrily for world power. The United States had world leadership thrust upon it.

The milepost finds Americans bogged down in a Southeast Asian war threatening to erode U.S. world leadership. It finds the Kremlin beset with problems, unhappily aware of a waning authority in the world of revolutionaries and possibly caught up in severe internal conflict.

The United States has never learned to act like a great power, in the opinion of George F. Kennan, one of the most celebrated of contemporary American diplomats.

In his "Memoirs, 1925-1950," just published by Little, Brown & Co., he contends Washington's dealings with the Russians for years were marked by naivete and an anxiety to look good to the folks back home.

We're Introverts

"One of the most consistent and incurable traits of American statesmanship," he says, "is its neurotic self-consciousness and introversion."

"He cues a tendency to act with an eye on 'those echelons of American opinion, Congressional opinion first and foremost, to which the respective statesmen are anxious to appeal.'"

Kennan, the Mr. X who wrote the "containment policy" against Soviet expansion, evidently still feels to this day that American statesmanship has yet to come of age.

The anxiety of U.S. policy makers about how they look to U.S. public opinion, he writes, has placed often on American statesmanship "the stamp of certain histrionic futility," making it ineffective in the pursuit of real national objectives. And until Americans learn better, he holds, "the country will not have a mature and effective foreign policy worthy of a great power."

From the time the Franklin D. Roosevelt administration recognized Russia, American policy often displayed a certain innocence in dealing with Moscow, relying on assurances of Moscow's good intentions, despite publicly pronounced aims to the contrary.

Kennan says he has regretted the American tendency before, during and after World War II to feed an impression that it was the United States which was anxious for Soviet collaboration and friendship, that it was the United States which wanted something from Moscow, that could not face up to postwar problems without implying to American opinion that everything was being undertaken in the framework of big-power collaboration.

Kremlin Greedy

That, he said, was bound to fortify a Kremlin belief in the strength of its position and increase the "greediness of their asking price for the very collaboration we were anxious to have."

What Kennan saw in his terms of service as a diplomat in Moscow convinced him that U.S. policy toward the Soviet Union, and plans and commitments made for shaping the postwar world, were "based on a dangerous misreading of the personality, the intentions and the political situation of the Soviet leadership."

The U.S. government, in Kennan's opinion, had found it difficult to understand the Soviet political threat as such, and to deal with that threat in any but military terms. But the threat was political—the threat of seizure of governments and countries by subversion rather than force of arms.

Chinese Defect

But what of the Russians? They had their big failures, too. These have been glaringly brought to light recently by the Chinese Communist defection from the Kremlin leadership.

"There is today," Kennan writes, "no such thing as 'communism' in the sense that there was in 1947; there are only a number of national regimes which cloak themselves in the verbal trappings of radical Marxism and follow domestic policies influenced to one degree or another by Marxist concepts."

Clearly today the Kremlin leadership is up to its collec-

Linguistics Program Described To Home-School Association

KAUKAUNA — "To be an effective speaker, a student must develop a conscious command of his language and the teaching of linguistics helps children to use words more effectively," said Bernard Hupperts, language consultant in the Kaukauna public and parochial schools, at a meeting of the Holy Cross Home-School Association.

Linguistics help children develop a command of language through the combining of reading, spelling and language rather than each being treated as a separate subject. Material for linguistics is based on need, readiness and curiosity of the child, said Hupperts. The selective discovery or inductive approach is used to teach linguistics with children learning to use their own observation.

Visual Aids Used

"The aim is to get children more involved with their language. Students are doing more writing and thinking in language. Audio and visual aids are used in the teaching of the subject," he continued.

He said the program is being taught selected classes in public and parochial schools this year, but will be expanded to include more classes next year. Fourth and sixth grade pupils from Holy Cross demonstrated typical classroom situations in the linguistic program.

The traveling attendance trophy went to the room taught by Sister Bernadette with Sister Joseph Marie classroom second and Sister Rose classroom third.

Members of the hospitality committee were Mrs. Clifford Weyers, Mrs. Ralph Meulemans, Mrs. Michael Mieke, Mrs. Boniface Pendergast and Mrs. Raymond Van Dyn Hoven.

There Are Over 750,000 gun collectors in America, who spend an approximate $400 million yearly on their hobby, with some special orders as high as $5000. Harold Peterson, head curator of the National Park Service Museum, Wash- ington, D.C., a leading authority and writer on arms and a collector himself, sights down the barrel of an American blunderbuss, circa 1700. He indicates that the weapon of today is but a product of the historical influence created by American gunmakers in the last 150 years. (APN Photo)

Custom Dies Slowly
Questioned informally in gun shops around the country, most as a weapon of defense nor as a tool of the hunt nor as an item of sports equipment nor its in- fluence of American histo- ry as the main if not the only eradication place in history ad- quately explains its mystique.

Why, for instance, the elabo- rate ornamentation? On display in guarded and locked away and who, on a golden October (America 934, Ireland 931) morn in 1780, atop a hill in Tap-Long Island in 1874 drew 100,000 pan, N.Y., was hanged. Before spectators, his execution Andre pleaded, Today target shooting is an Olympic sport, an intercollegi- with Gen. Washington to allow him to die heroically, before a firing squad, rather than igno- minously, on a gallows. Why one route to the hereafter should be regarded honorable and another odious is a mystery; we note only that, to this day, the hairy-chested way to take one's leave is by the gun.

Consider dueling. Doubt oc- curs as to whether the long-held custom of premeditated murder at 10 paces would have gained such fashion among the fashion- able had it not been for the gun. Plainly it was gentler on the sensibilities to rip an opponent's viscera from a distance with a pistol ball and profound courtes- ies than to do it up close with a blade.

Thomas Paine damned duel- ing as "Gothic and absurd" and all 13 colonies outlawed it. Still it remained a flourishing Ameri- can folly until well into the 19th century.

Henry Deringer Jr., the Phila- delphia gunmaker, died in 1858 a wealthy man, and most hon- ored. During one five-year peri- od he sold 8,000 of his wickedly old handsome little pistols and so many imitations were on the market at the same time in oth- er cities his name, misspelled, soon became a common noun. The gun John Wilkes Booth the survey of them taken in the field or the one taken at home with wives listening.

Triumph, of course, means a kill, though many hunters assert that that is secondary. But certainly the kill must have some importance. Most shooters insist that the bullet produce a more dramatic result than a mere hole in a target, as a shooting gallery operator would testify. When the metal bullseye in the national rifle matches the shooters objected bitterly. No ping.

Some hunters, like Gery Aus- tin of Santa Fe, N.M., further indulge their primeval urge by using primeval techniques. Aus- tin, a writer and part-time game warden, hunts only with authen- tic muzzle-loading, black-powder guns like the ones Kit Carson used. Why? "To put some of the fun of hunting back into it." But reflections of its own. A why does he hunt at all? Austin spokesman for Winchester com- pany credits TV westerns with influencing a new demand for the firm's lever-action rifles. Says Wendell G. Swank, direc- tor of Arizona's game and fish department: "I believe hunting runs even deeper in the human emotion than that search for ad- venture and the desire to over- come obstacles which stimu- late people to climb the most difficult peaks."

This only skirts the fringes. Robert Ardrey draws a deep breath and says it straight out: "Man is a predator whose na- tural instinct is to kill with a weapon." Ardrey is an anthropologist.

Hunt for Pleasure
That's just target shooting. Shooting animals, the leisure activity in which (along with catching fish) more Americans participate than any other, is in a category of its own. About 17 million Americans hunt for pleasure. That's better than one out of every 10 citizens old enough to lift and aim a shotgun. In pursuit of their pastime the nation's hunters spend either $1.4 billion or $3.9 billion a year, depending on whether you read the survey of them taken in the field or the one taken at home with wives listening.

Assembly Okays Adult Handling of All Traffic Cases
MADISON (AP) — Juvenile traffic offenders would be treat- ed as adults under a new juve- nile code adopted by the Wiscon- sin Assembly.

The measure provides that names of such offenders could be made public and that the juveniles could be fined. The bill, forwarded to the Sen- ate Thursday on a 90-6 vote, was watered down considerably before it left the Assembly.

Before it was amended, the bill would have called for dis- closure of all names of juveniles charged with assault. This provision was stricken. In its final form, the bill provides that the juvenile court judge shall in non-traffic cases determine whether the youngster should be tried in his court or as an adult.

Students Lauded For Court Conduct
CINCINNATI, Ohio (AP) — A federal judge commended 40 friends of an accused draft dodger for their behavior at his arraignment Thursday.

The spectators, who described themselves as Antioch College students, came to U.S. District Court to lend moral support to Daniel C. Bromley, 18, Sharon- ville Ohio, who is charged with failure to register for Selective Service.

They sat quietly for more than an hour until Bromley's case was called and then stood up while judge Timothy S. Hogan granted a continuance. As they began to file out, the judge stopped them.

"Before you all leave, I want to commend you on your con- duct," he told the group.

City Atty. Geenen To Represent School Board at Hearing

In written and oral arguments in Dane County Circuit Court at Madison Monday, City Atty. David Geenen will present Appleton's case to counter action of the Appleton Teachers Union (ATU).

The ATU, through the Wisconsin Federation of Teachers (AFL-CIO), has appealed a ruling of the Wisconsin Employment Relations Commission (WERC) which said unionized teachers had no complaint against the Appleton Board of Education.

Members of the ATU were docked pay a year ago when they absented themselves from classes to attend the annual state convention of the Wisconsin Federation of Teachers (WFT), with which ATU is affiliated, at Milwaukee.

Separate Conventions

The problem developed when the Federation and Wisconsin Education Association did not hold their separate conventions on the same dates last year, as had been a tradition for some time.

Members of the ATU advised the school board the Teachers' Federation parley would be Oct. 6 and 7 and that members planned to attend, hoping to receive the same treatment as their counterparts in the Wisconsin Education Association (WEA).

The school board said it would allow 10 officers and delegates to attend the teachers' union convention, excusing them from teaching duties "without compensation, provided adequate substitutes can be found".

Union teachers were also informed they would face a deduction in pay for the two days.

Dismiss Action

Subsequently, the union filed a complaint with the WERC, as did other locals in various state.

Nuclear Line Hearing Set

$4.3 Million Interconnection Project Planned

Post-Crescent Madison Bureau
MADISON — A proposed $4.3 million transmission line connecting the planned Point Beach nuclear power plant near Kewaunee with electrical substations at Point Beach and near Appleton will be considered by the State Public Service Commission in a hearing on Dec. 1.

The project has been proposed by the Wisconsin Public Service Corporation, which wishes to interconnect its facilities with the Wisconsin Electric Power Company at its Point Beach and North Appleton substations.

The 345,000 volt electric line would be about 60 miles long, under the plan.

The connection at the North Appleton substation would become an addition to the present 138 kilovolt interconnection between the two firms at that point.

The hearing will be held at the commission's headquarters here, and will start at 1:30 p.m.

K of C Plan Memorial Mass

A memorial service and mass for deceased members has been scheduled for Nov. 30 by the Knights of Columbus, Father Fitzmaurice Council.

The mass has been set for 7:15 p.m. at Sacred Heart Church, Appleton, with the Rev. Elroy Reimer, chaplain, as celebrant. The memorial service will be in the gym immediately after the mass.

All Knights as well as relatives of the deceased are invited.

Launch Pad at UW Fox Valley Center

Heavens Open to New London Youths

BY ALICE HUCK

Post-Crescent Staff Writer

When the unmanned Apollo 4 moonship blasted into space last Wednesday, a group of New London Junior High School students had a pretty good idea of where it was going.

And if they closed their eyes, they probably could identify the soaring ship with the arrow they had watched dart across the northern hemisphere sky at the University of Wisconsin-Fox Valley Center planetarium Tuesday morning.

About 60 students from two classes made the planetarium their "launching pad" for fascinating adventures in astronomy under the exciting oral spell of Terry Dawson, an Appleton sophomore, who operates the planetarium and gives the accompanying lecture.

Teachers Mrs. John Lehman and Mrs. Jerome Freiburger, toured with the students who came to the Town of Menasha Center by bus and were "having lunch on the bus on the way home."

Projects Images

The fully-equipped planetarium, one of the best of its kind north of Chicago, works by projecting images from a $22,000 "heavenly body" machine on a vaulted dome.

Squeals, screams, sighs and sharp intakes of breath, punctuated with "I see it," or

"There it is," were the only sounds in the circular room that was dark for most of an hour.

Dawson gives a less technical lecture to children than he would to adults, and to keep their attention on the narration, he modernizes the ancient stories about the many constellations.

"The mythological 'Orion-the-hunter' becomes 'Mantle-the-sluggo'; 'Drace-the-dragon' becomes 'Ollie-the-dragon'; and 'Ursa-Major-The Great Bear' becomes 'Smok-ey the Bear'."

Shirt Tails

If the bear does not have a long tail on earth, but does in the sky, Dawson has a logical explanation: "The first bear that came out of the sky went right to a stream at Oneida because he wanted to eat some fish—which bears love—but it took him so long to catch his fish that his tail froze in the ice. How else do you get a bear free when his tail is stuck in the ice? You break it loose, and that's why earth-bears have short tails, and sky-bears have long tails."

Dawson is especially able to identify with junior high classes because it was at this age he began his interest in astronomy. He knows there are some technically-minded kids in his audience, and for these he explains how the star-ball, with its central light and little holes can project "very accurately" the movement of the sun, moon, planets and stars on the dome ceiling exactly as they appear at various times of the year.

"Celestial Triangle"

The group learned how a sailor tells his way across the oceans by the use of the "celestial triangle," a series of lines between three stars that have enabled navigators to spot their ships' courses for centuries.

At one point Dawson asks the group to imagine they are 4,600 miles down in the center of the earth, and then a special ball reflects an "inside-out" picture of the earth as we know it and stars pass above the contour.

At times it seems as though the room is moving, but it is only the star-ball showing what happens as the sun moves from east to west. Dawn and sunset are shown by a dimming and raising of lights.

End River Pollution

Big Job Faces Tiny Village

BY ROGER PITT

Post-Crescent Staff Writer

NICHOLS — Creation of another Chicago was the dream of A. L. Nichols, founder of this tiny north-central Outagamie County community, but his dream never materialized.

Almost overnight a community took shape east of the Shioc River in the years just prior to World War I. Nichols, with a dream and little money, set about to develop a thriving metropolis in what was low swampland. But it took village status.

Local historians aren't certain why he chose the site of Wisconsin's 384th incorporated village as the place where he was going to turn his dream into reality. Development of the village wasn't a slow process.

Most of the homes and buildings in the small hamlet populated by 181 persons were erected almost overnight. A municipal sewage system and community water system were installed at the same time. Records show that this construction took place about 1918, making it one of the first communities in the area to have municipal utilities.

These same progressive ventures eventually became the catalyst to incorporation. The sewage system developers neglected to put in a treatment system and the effluent was polluting the Shioc River. Almost a half century later state orders to end the pollution were issued and incorporation seemed the best way to go about reworking the sewage system.

The water system is privately owned and village residents pay special assessments, just

Teacher Group Gives Reasons

Suggest 12-Month School Year

BY MAIJA PENIKIS

Post-Crescent Staff Writer

A 12-month school year, with a pupil rotation plan, has been proposed by the Appleton Teachers Union (ATU) as a possible solution to the problems of overcrowding and rising taxes.

The proposal was made in a newsletter sent to ATU members, which is the minority teachers' group. Appleton Education Association (AEA) serves as the bargaining agent for teachers here.

According to the newsletter, the "closing down of schools for long summer vacations makes no sense in a world which is no longer agriculturally based."

Inefficient Use

"Not only is this an inefficient use of the physical plant, but it is a waste of the talents of teachers who are unable to meet family expenses on their nine-month salaries and often take menial jobs during the summer," to supplement their salaries. of the year, the organization argues.

It also listed many advantages of the 12-month plan.

Children would have the opportunity to enter in any one of the four quarters of the year, which means they could attend with others their own age. Under the present system, a child born after a certain date must wait a full year to enter school.

Reduce Delinquency

Older children who work during vacation periods would have an easier time since only one-fourth of them would be seeking jobs at the same time. Colleges would face only one-fourth as many incoming freshmen at a time.

Many welfare authorities believe that this would reduce the delinquency problem since all 46 million students would not be free at the same time.

Could decrease drop-outs since smaller class size would

There is a shortage of teachers, classrooms are overcrowded but go unused for one-fourth give the student more opportunity for individual help.

A further advantage for the child would be more courses for college preparation, vocational training or enrichment that cannot be satisfactorily fitted into the nine months session.

Benefit Teachers

The new system would also benefit teachers, the group claims. A flexible schedule is proposed, with teachers selecting the option to teach three quarters and take one quarter leave, teach six quarters and take two quarters leave, or take a full year's sabbatical leave after 12 quarters.

"Taxpayers would benefit by the reduction of the need to build additional new facilities."

"The present system wastes our tax money, restricts our recreational opportunities and disrupts business," the group maintains.

'What Do They Want?'

Recruiters Puzzled by Student Protestors

BY ARLEN BOARDMAN

Post-Crescent Staff Writer

Lawrence University student demonstrations, which ranged from bold to passive, have been more puzzling than detrimental to the military recruiters at which they were aimed.

"What are they after?" asked one recruiter after his departure rather than his arrival was thwarted by members of Students for a Democratic Society (SDS), expressing opposition to campus recruiting and the Vietnam conflict.

Marine Capt. David Cotellesse, Vietnam veteran, and M.Sgt. Donald Malott, veteran of three combat tours, shrugged off the half-hour blockade as "An attempt to get a little attention."

Cotellesse said the sit-in which accompanied the two days recruiting in Lawrence's Memorial Union caused little commotion and actually stirred interest in the recruiting.

Recruiting Not Affected

Representatives of the armed services indicated that this and other demonstrations has had no noticeable effect on recruiting, which they described as being "good."

At Lawrence and other colleges and universities the recruiters usually set up displays and answered student questions. Students seriously interested in enlisting were tested and interviewed.

Recruiters said about 15 students showed serious interest in military programs at Lawrence last week, about what they expected.

The blockade did involve enough disruption to cause Malott to call the police. About four squad cars arrived but the early afternoon demonstration had already been discontinued.

Naval recruiters' confrontation with the blockade was about a "two-minute affair". Lt. (j.g.) Edward P. Wielor, 25, told a demonstrator "we're going through." The conversation began when he was asked to move to allow two civilian cars through.

Sign Removed

Malott, who was "not impressed" by the protest, questioned the goals of the movement.

"I feel these students are striving for something out of reach; they just don't understand the complexity of the problem," said the noncommissioned officer who fought as a Naval bombardier in World War II.

This was the second demonstration the 22-year service veteran has seen: the first was at Lawrence by the same group a year ago. However, he said the East Berlin Communist-inspired demonstrations, which he witnessed, were somewhat similar.

"Personally the protests don't bother me as long as they are controlled and peaceful," he explained. He felt the SDS blockade overstepped these boundaries. Capt. Cotellesse, who returned from the Southeast Asian conflict last June, said that when the protesters offered to remove the blockade if he requested it, he did.

"After they made their offer I told them I would appreciate it if they would remove the obstruction from the road," he said.

The makeshift blockade culminated two days of passive and uneventful protesting by the sign-toting SDS members. About 12 to 15 demonstrators set up shop Monday morning in the union with the recruiters. The recruiters were available Monday and Tuesday from 9 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. to answer student questions about officer programs.

Capt. Cotellesse said that two

On Appleton Streets

Yu'e Decor, No Flags

American flags did not fly over the city streets of Appleton Saturday — Veterans Day — because of what has been called an "oversight."

Frank Keuler, director of public works, said that putting the flags out, a matter taken care of by his department, was not done this year because "we were not notified" of it.

He said that in the case of more prominent holidays, such as the 4th of July, flags are put up as a matter of course. But in the case of less prominent holidays, "we are usually notified by the city council or the mayor."

No such notification came through, Keuler said.

The matter came to the attention of Keuler through a phone call from an Appleton resident who wondered why the flags were not out.

"I feel bad about it," Keuler said. "If it had been brought up yesterday, we would most certainly have had them out."

Keuler also noted that even if the flags had been put up, they would have been partially obscured by the Christmas decorations already up on Appleton streets.

He said a request may be made next year to the Chamber of Commerce to hold off putting up the decorations until after Veterans Day, thereby making display of the flags more prominent.

The Holiday Decorations were in place but conspicuous by their absence Saturday, Veterans Day, were the flags along College Avenue. City officials explained it was an oversight. (Post-Crescent Photo)

Collectors Get High Returns

Sleuthing Out State Tax Distribution Errors Grows Into Booming Business

BY PETER GENIESSE
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

Tax shuffling has developed into a $1 million a year business in Wisconsin.

The state's complex system of collecting and distributing income tax monies has spawned jobs for private auditing firms which check tax rolls in Madison records.

Many towns, cities and villages benefit from the mistakes. But the only sure winner is the accountant-investigator.

For every $10,000 error in appropriation found in favor of a city, the accountant is assured of at least a $3,000 cut. Many firms receive as high as 50 per cent of the take.

State tax officials would like to see something done. The allocation department is filled with dozens of auditors, representing firms and individual communities, scrutinizing the records.

A few years ago, tax claims for persons listed in the wrong municipality were almost nonexistent. In 1965 the department processed 1,700 claims and last year the number had soared to 5,000.

City officials, searching for some relief for the property owners in view of soaring tax rates, are pleased when a few extra dollars are received from the state.

However, they'd prefer to drop the whole thing — if towns would back off in their income tax investigations.

Henry Schreve, Appleton's finance director, pointed to the numerous tax claims against the city in the past year and remarked, "I wish this would be straightened out." For every claim in favor of Appleton, there are five or six against the city, he said.

During budget times, estimates must be made of the revenues expected through state tax rebates. "One big claim could seriously affect the estimate," Schreve stated.

Twin Cities Concerned

The clerks in the Twin Cities also are concerned about tax claims against their municipalities, which heavily outweigh the additional income found through investigation.

Neenah has already received claims totaling $17,000 from neighboring municipalities this year. Less than a third of that amount works the other way — for the city.

Walter (Doc) Loehning, who recently retired as city treasurer after 37 years, has been engaged by Neenah to check erroneous allocations in the Madison tax offices for 20 per cent of the discovery.

But the towns aren't about to drop their investigations. It may hurt to pay an auditing firm one-third of what it finds, but the additional revenue makes it worthwhile.

The Town of Menasha, which belongs to three post offices, receives the most benefits from the investigations. Every year almost 20 per cent of its total state tax allocation goes to another municipality by mistake.

$75,000 Benefit
Clerk Robert Jacobs estimated its auditing firm would turn over an additional $75,000 this year to the town. Tax claims against the town will amount to only $5,000.

The Town of Neenah, according to Clerk Richard Roudsbush, has already received an additional $25,500 through the tax roll check.

The towns in the Twin City area are most susceptible to erroneous allocations, since they bear the same names as their adjoining municipalities.

The major reason for errors is due to a tiny box on top of the state income tax form which indicates the municipality. If the town is not checked off, chances are the return will be credited to the city of the same name.

Town of Menasha residents have three mailing addresses, meaning that every year numerous tax claims are made to Appleton, Neenah and Menasha.

Want Post Office
Often an attorney or tax firm prepares the state tax return for an individual and assumes city for the mailing address purposes.

This led Town of Menasha Chairman Roland Kampe to recently claim that the town was losing thousands of dollars each year (the amount paid to the auditors) for not having its own post office.

Even more money is lost, Kampe stated, from mistakes in state rebates for insurance and vehicle license fees. Few auditing firms will check those items since there is little financial return for the amount of work involved.

Lengthy Process
The cities, as well as the towns, get in on the exchange of state monies when investigations show a taxpayer lived in two communities during the year but only listed one on his tax form.

Corporation sales records often benefit one community more than another and auditors discover their client isn't receiving a fair shake. Construction firms may have a main office in one city but do work in another.

And part of the income earned should have been allocated to the municipality where the work was done.

The whole process often takes 18 months or more and some investigation of tax rebates stretches back to the cut-off year of 1962.

College Avenue 'Thingamajigs'

Call 'em Kiosks Like Turks

BY WILLIAM C. CAREY
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

A dash of Turkish architecture is getting a lot of mileage in downtown Appleton.

We're talking about the brightly-colored kiosks that dot College Avenue.

There are a total of 102 of them on both sides of the avenue from Drew to Richmond Streets — often referred to as "Appleton's new million dollar strip."

Different kinds of dome-shaped kiosks have added a sparkle to the beautiful business district, along with serving practical purposes.

Really Multi-Purpose
The triple-headed kiosks with their attached billboards serve the general public for posting notices of coming civic events.

Others near the bus stop serve as a decoration as well as protection from the rain as they form a "roof" over the attractive sidewalk benches.

And still a third serve to dress up the entry signs at each end of every block which list the names of stores and merchants. You might call them outdoor public directories.

At any rate, city officials say the kiosks are here to stay and eagerly volunteer the observation that they have added a colorful touch to a much beautified central business district.

Actually, kiosks have come a long way since the Turks gave them a name.

Use By Definition

Webster says the Turkish definition of kiosk is "an open summerhouse or pavilion often having a roof supported by pillars."

With a little imagination,

College Avenue property owners are putting up some good fronts — and making everybody happy.

Since the reconstruction of the business district there has been a growing trend for remodeling storefronts.

At least a half dozen buildings have been renovated and the improvements have blended in with the Avenue's new personality.

City officials are hoping other merchants and store owners will follow suit, keeping in mind that what's up front counts, too.

you might say the ornamental kiosks seem to fit the bill with some qualification.

And surely the British description of a kiosk captures the College Avenue pulse of being "A stand where merchandise is sold."

Realizing that kiosks provided the best kind of public exposure there is available downtown, city officials and representatives of the Appleton Area Chamber of Commerce sat down recently and came up with a policy.

It reads something like this:

• No political signs, nor posters relating to elections, shall be posted.

• Four posters may be placed on each individual bulletin board on the kiosk.

• Parties and organizations installing signs shall maintain their good appearance. Any sign becoming an eyesore will be removed.

• Signs shall not be left on any kiosk for more than one month.

• The kiosk sign policy will be administered by the Chamber of Commerce, subject to regulations prescribed by the common council from time to time.

• No organization nor individual shall use more than six sign spaces at any one time.

• Commercial announcements by merchants are taboo.

Avenue merchants have agreed to help "police" the policy by appointing block captains to keep tabs on posters.

With regard to the block entry signs — there is 100 per cent agreement the directory affixed to the kiosks are serving a convenient purpose.

So the next time someone asks what those thingamajigs are on poles with the half egg shell-shape on College Avenue, the reply might be thus:

"The Turks have a name for them: kiosks."

School Aids Proposal Reveals Little-Known State Insurance Fund

Withdrawal Request Is Fourth Upon Account in Recent Times

Post-Crescent Madison Bureau

MADISON — Legislative controversy provoked by the complex plan of Gov. Warren P. Knowles to finance an emergency appropriation of aid to local schools has thrust into the limelight a little-known fact — that for more than six decades the state government has operated a fire-insurance business.

One proposal of the state governor is to withdraw $3 million from the reserves of the state fire fund as a contribution to the school appropriation.

To Insure
To compensate for reducing the reserve account, the governor has also asked the legislature to authorize the administering state insurance department to reinsure risks now covered by the state fund — which are confined to state and municipal government properties.

Some auditing firms appear willing to drop this added job, saving it isn't as profitable as it looks.

But one Fox Valley official noted, "I suppose the only ones who come out on top are the finance the proposed local school tax relief."

Revenue estimates in proposed budgets would be more accurate and the municipalities would not have to worry about wide variations in their checks from the state.

Woman Fined,

Lectured for Shoplifting

An Appleton mother of five, caught shoplifting in the Red Owl Store, 700 W. Wisconsin Ave., Friday morning, got a stern lecture and a $50 fine, or 24 days in jail, when she pleaded guilty to a theft charge.

Mrs. Fae D. Jahnke, 42, 306 E. Frances St., appeared in Outagamie County Court Branch 2 Friday afternoon on a charge of stealing two packages of headbands, one roll of color film, a beef roast, and two packages of soup concentrate. Store authorities said she had all but the beef roast in her purse when she left the store about 11 a.m. She had the store under her coat.

Judge Gustave J. Keller ordered that the articles be returned to the store. Mrs. Jahnke paid her fine.

Planning Commission To Continue Study of Two Zoning Requests

KAUKAUNA — The planning commission will meet at 4 p.m. Tuesday to consider two rezoning requests which have been discussed previously with no recommendations given.

Requests have been received to rezone property at Oviatt and Tobacco Streets and Crooks Avenue and Henry Street from Class B residential to local shopping. Commission members have requested property owners to prepare a list of restrictive covenants, which would be included in property deeds, limiting the types of businesses permitted if the rezoning is recommended.

Senior High Girls Work in Appleton Police Department

BY BILL KNUTSON
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

Donna and Pam are high school seniors. They have been with the Appleton Police Department since last summer.

No, the young girls are not policewomen. They are office trainees, working under local and federal programs.

Pamela Clark, 18, 1415 N Bennett St., started last August as a Neighborhood Youth Corps worker. Federal monies, allotted through the U. S. Department of Labor, pay her salary.

Donna Drephal, 17, 819 W Glendale Ave., started with the police department last June, under the same federal program. She now works under an "office cooperative program," under auspices of the high schools.

Work Part Time
Both girls, Appleton High School-West students, are secretarial-clerical aides in the police identification bureau. They work part time under the supervision of Sgt. Roland Recker and Lt. Robert Lathrop. The girls go to regular classes mornings and work with police afternoons.

Miss Drephal's program allows her to work 20 hours a week. The city pays her $1.40 per hour. She could get a 10 cents per hour raise after six months.

Unlike Miss Clark, she is "graded" by Lathrop on her work at the police station. Each month, she submits to her school supervisor a report sheet on her progress. He grades her, just as would a teacher, on the actual quality of her work, and on personal traits such as appearance, telephone technique, work habits, attendance, attitude, cooperation, and dependability.

Office Work Sequence
The grades Lathrop gives Miss Drephal are reflected on her report card. She receives one school credit for her on-the-job training.

Harlan Priot, Appleton High School-West instructor and coordinator of the program, said that the 49 girls in the program have all gone through "the office work sequence" during high school, and now work out of the schools in the afternoon. The 49 girls are placed in 42 different offices around the city.

Priot said the girls have been particularly helpful in assisting with the basis of "employability," he updating and changeover of the explained. All seniors, they have a related office course at school. This is the second year girls have had on-the-job training in the cooperative program.

Under the federal program, Miss Clark can work at the police department a maximum of 14 hours per week. Although job requirements are much the same for both girls, Lathrop does not grade Miss Clark's work for the school. The two programs under which the girls work are unrelated.

First Office Job
This is the first office job for the girls, who will graduate in June. Their high school courses are oriented toward office careers, as is their work at the police station.

Lathrop said that Miss Clark and Miss Drephal do much the same work as the full-time clerks — with the exception of typing investigation reports submitted by police. "There is too much security involved in some of the reports," Lathrop explained.

Police Chief Earl O. Wolff said the girls have been particularly helpful in assisting with the updating and changeover of the Higher Pay, Job Satisfaction

Technical Training Pays Off

Post-Crescent Madison Bureau

MADISON — Technical education pays off. Oshkosh researchers have found out.

It pays off in better salaries, sound jobs and career advancement, a research project by the supervisor of instruction of the Oshkosh Technical Institute has shown.

Stanley S. Spanbauer conducted the study while working for a master's degree at Wisconsin State University - Oshkosh.

His findings have been reviewed by Prof. John R. Mook of the university's education department in a recent issue of the monthly magazine of the Wisconsin Association of School Boards.

Junior College Need

Mook suggests that Spanbauer's research points up the need for junior colleges in the state, the modification of some courses offered in technical schools, better advising of students in doubt as to their educational futures, and the possibility of transfer of credits between state technical schools and collegiate institutions.

Spanbauer studied the careers of graduates of the technical courses of the Oshkosh Technical Institute from 1961 through 1965.

Of the 172 graduates, 117 answered a questionnaire supplied them.

Spanbauer found that most of the graduates were working in fields closely related to their education at OTI, were generally well pleased with the education, and considered themselves well prepared to meet the challenges presented them in their chosen occupations.

And he found that the graduates won an average salary increase of 25 per cent for those with five years of work experience following their departure from OTI.

More recent data has shown that the pay for first year workers was up in 1967, according to the report.

First year average salaries for the 1965 graduates totaled $380 a

Appleton Sea Scouts At Milwaukee Program

Members of Sea Scout Ship, "Northern Light" of Appleton, participated in the seventh annual ship-shaping day in Milwaukee this weekend, sponsored by the Mariner Girl Scouts of the Milwaukee area.

Saturday's program was divided into four periods consisting of eight courses each, with a full day of instruction. A dinner and dance followed the day's activities.

Leaders accompanying the scouts were Larry R. Hahn, skipper of the "Northern Light," and Pete Krauss, skipper of the Sea Scout Ship "Rebel" of Sturgeon Bay.

mentary on the findings that Second year graduates of OTI (class of 1964) averaged $448 a month; third year, $442, fourth year, $486, and fifth year $489, technical school graduates.

The average monthly salary for first year work of 1967 was $437, according to more recent work.

Highest Paid
Highest paid graduates for the study between November, 1965, and January, 1966, were electronics graduates, Spanbauer found, at a $512 a month level. Other monthly averages were auto mechanics, $457, mechanical design, $456, accounting, $408, conservation, $393, marketing, $391, and secretarial science, $305.

Substantial fringe benefits awarded the graduates were also studied in the course of the research.

Of those returning the questionnaire, 64 workers reported that they liked their jobs very much, 21 were fairly well satisfied, 22 were satisfied for the time being, two found their jobs unpleasant, and one definitely disliked his work.

New Banking Service Will Begin Tuesday

Valley Bancorporation Introduces Reserve Plan to Back Up Personal Check Accounts

It's getting so these days you count don't necessarily have to have money handy to spend it.

The latest innovation in banking service — it's called the Reserve Account Plan — is being introduced in the area, Tuesday by Valley Bancorporation.

The banking service, which will provide a continuous reserve of checking-account cash for individual depositors, was announced by Gus A. Zuehlke, president of Valley Bancorporation.

It will be available for all member banks, including Appleton State Bank and branches at Dale, Fremont, Hortonville and Shuon, American State Bank, Northern State Bank, Bank of Black Creek, Reedsville State Bank and Sherwood State Bank.

The new service will be known as the Personal Reserve Account and makes available from $200 to $3,000 to certified depositors," Zuehlke said.

Under the procedure, the customer writes a check against his reserve fund when needed to supplement his checking account and doesn't know he has overdrew his account.

The banks will handle repayments internally through the depositor's regular checking account.

"No charge or credit cards are necessary," Zuehlke said.

To put the plan into effect, the customer applies to one of the banks and the bank establishes the reserve account within the limits prescribed.

The bank will set up a repayment plan to start automatically. This will be done by deducting a predetermined percentage of the checking account each month.

The amount to be deducted will depend upon the size of the transfer. It will range from $15 a month for a $300 transfer to $150 monthly for one ranging from $2,700 to $3,000.

The monthly interest rate on the unpaid balance is 1 per cent, and the customer may pay off any time.

Morality Is Topic Of Final Catholic Education Lecture

KAUKAUNA — "Morality, the Concern for the Person," will be the topic for the sixth and final session of an adult education program at 7:30 p.m. Monday at St. Mary School hall.

The six-week session has attracted more than 550 persons for the first five discussions designed to bring to light principles of Christian life which have been emphasized by Vatican II. Guest speaker will be the Rev. Alfred Lison, founding pastor of Nativity Church, Green Bay.

The education series is sponsored by the three Catholic parishes in the city and is open to all residents of the area. A question and answer period will follow the lecture.

South Africa Recruits Foreign Mine Workers

LOURENCO MARQUES, Mozambique (AP) — Forty-eight per cent of the workers in coal, uranium and gold mines in neighboring South Africa are depend upon the size of the transfer. It will range from $15 a month for a $300 transfer to $150 monthly for one ranging from $2,700 to $3,000.

The total number of natives from the Portuguese East Africa on territory working in South African mines last year was 163,914, the agency said. The workers sign up for work periods of 18 months.

Drop From Sight in Cambodia 3 Prisoners Disappear With Enemy Captors

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia which handles U.S. affairs in (AP) — Three American war Cambodia, said it had not been prisoners, one of them seriously contacted about the release of ill, dropped swiftly out of sight Saturday after their release by the Viet Cong to a representative of a U.S. committee op- posed to the war in Vietnam.

The three U.S. Army ser- brainwashed by the Commu- geants were set free in a cere- mony staged by the Viet Cong's National Liberation Front at its modest Phnom Penh headquar- ters. The men then were taken away in a station wagon driven by a man who appeared to be Vietnamese. That was the last newsmen saw of them.

The Australian Embassy, prisoners, claimed the prisoners were not under duress and that he knew where they are located. But he would not say where and added that it is improbable that newsmen will be allowed to see them.

In Saigon, U.S. officials re- leased a document contending the three prisoners had been brainwashed by the Commu- nists. The document quoted a Viet Cong defector who claimed he personally took part in the indoctrination of two of the pris- oners. Quake Moved Mountains

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Commerce Department said Saturday the 1964 Alaskan earthquake was so powerful that it moved mountains, temporarily raised the level of the Mississippi River and sent a seismic wave as far as the Ant- arctic.

LBJ Gives Own Medal To War Hero

MCCONNELL AIR FORCE BASE, Kan. (AP) — One of the 11 F105 Thunderchief pilots re- ceiving Silver Stars from Presi- dent Johnson here Saturday for gallantry over North Vietnam was surprised by a special memento.

The President removed his own Silver Star cloth lapel pin — which he had worn constantly since it was presented to him by Gen. Douglas MacArthur in 1942 — and placed it in the pilot's hand.

The recipient of the unusual memento was Capt. Howard L. Bodenhamer, a native of Roanoke, Ind., who is currently as- signed to McConnell.

The President received the Sil- ver Star for a flying mission in the South Pacific in the early days of World War II when he was a Navy commander. Boden- hamer received the award — his second Silver Star — for gallan- try in air operations near Hanoi

New Satellite to Send First Photos

VANDENBERG AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — Monitor- ing stations on the East Coast expect the first signals today from a new weather satellite, launched into orbit to circle the globe once every 114 minutes while it takes pictures.

The hatbox-shaped craft, measuring 22 by 24 inches, was sent aloft Friday. If operational, it will send pictures to 305 weather stations around the world at the rate of 10 each hour.

The satellite, ESSA 6, is to study cloud cover. Previous ESSA satellites have sent more than 30,000 pictures to earth so far.

Goldberg Discussing Resolution Of U. S. for Peace Settlement

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. there is a formula that would be acceptable to both sides." Goldberg called Friday night on King Hussein of Jordan, who arrived back in New York from Washington earlier in the day.

Arabs Dislike
The United States has intro- duced a Middle East resolution in the council that is generally regarded as acceptable to Israel but unacceptable to the Arabs.

The U.S. resolution would have the council ask for "with- drawal of armed forces from oc- cupied territories, termination of claims or states of belliger- ence, secure and recognized boundaries," freedom of naviga- tion through international water- ways and "a just settlement of the refugee problem."

Arab sources said the Arab countries preferred a more spe- cific resolution sponsored by In- dia, Mali and Nigeria and re- jected by Israel.

This resolution says that "Is- rael's armed forces should with- draw from all the territories oc- cupied in the recent conflict," that "all states in the area should terminate the state or claim of belligerency" and that each "has the right to be secure within its borders." It calls for "a just settlement of the ques- tion of Palestine refugees" and "freedom of navigation in ac- cordance with international law."

Agreement to end the strike was reached after Feste assured the Madison Bus Co. it would receive the contributions, expected to come from business- men and private citizens.

Under terms of the agree- ment, teamster union drivers and mechanics will receive rais- es totaling 40 cents an hour. But the company must receive the $65,000 to make the contract binding.

The bus company agreed to withdraw its petition for aban- donment of service. The petition is pending before the Wisconsin Public Service Commission.

Bus drivers went on strike Sept. 20, after the company re- fused their demand for a 47 cent an hour increase. The com- pany offered 27 cents. Top pay fell for drivers at the time of the strike was $2.68 an hour.

Of the 131 deaths, only 9 oc- curred outside the areas hit by sea waves. Fifteen deaths were outside Alaska, including 11 in Crescent City, Calif., and 4 in Newport, Ore.

The highest point reached by the surging waves was 220 feet above sea level near Valdez, Alaska, where land about 4,000 feet long and 600 feet wide fell into the sea.

Group Urges Greater Laity Voice in

BY MALJA PENIKIS

Post-Crescent Staff Writer

With the newly-released recommendations of the National Catholic Educational Association (NCEA) regarding policy structures of Catholic education, giving more voice to the laity in the Church, a local committee has again stressed the importance of community interest in the problem.

The 36-member Appleton Catholic Education Committee, representing all city parishes and headed by Ralph DeDecker, has outlined six points which, if they could improve the local system. Many of these coincide with those listed by the NCEA committee, which includes the Rev. Richard Kleiber, Green Bay Diocesan superintendent.

One System
Points recommended by the local group include:

—Catholic schools in Appleton, elementary and high, should be regarded as one system and should be administered as such, shall be operated in given locations.

—A city school board should be set up of pastors and presidents of the parish and have the responsibility and authority to run the city-wide system.

—A professional educator should be hired to administer the system with authority to develop policy, act as liaison between the public and Catholic systems and perform the functions of his counterpart in the public system.

—A central purchasing agency for the city school system should be established under the supervision of the city school administrator.

—Each parish should have an elected school board to deal with school matters at the parish level.

—A diocesan school board should be elected with authority to develop policy for all the schools in the diocese so that they become part of an integrated system of Catholic education.

Not Elected
The last two points have become a reality to some extent. A diocesan school board was recently established but its members were selected by diocesan officials, not elected, as recommended by the group.

The NCEA proposals, encompassing the same ideas, go one step further and recommend the exclusion of diocesan officials, make the curia (chancellor, vicar general, consultants) ineligible for membership.

As spelled out in the suggested constitution, a product of three years' study, the diocesan board members would have the say on location, opening and closing of schools and parochial centers.

The determination as to whether schools or such centers should be operated in given locations shall be given to the city school board.

It is stressed in this study that if we are to divorce Catholic education from the class system and imposed by tuition and from the inadequacies of support out of general church funds, then the case must be brought to people: they must be convinced of the need and they must be given a voice in policy.

Guesswork Accurate
The statement attests to the fact that the local committee had shown quite a bit of foresight and a good deal of accurate guesswork since only Aug. 18, 1945, the couple had no children.

The statement attests to the fact that the local committee had shown quite a bit of foresight and a good deal of accurate guesswork since only Aug. 18, 1945, the couple had no children.

Because the return was so slight, a true sampling of the wishes of the people is not known. DeDecker has stressed, but as more and more opinions are voiced across the country, there is little doubt that the local committee has drawn some very timely conclusions earlier in the game than many similar organizations.

Face Problem Squarely
It must be stressed that these recommendations and questionnaires were not aimed at eliminating the Catholic school system, but rather to face the problem squarely and discuss what could be done to better the system.

"There was no question in our minds that the system is considered desirable by both clergy and laity; but the question is how do we make it a first-class system?" DeDecker stated.

The committee has expressed the feeling that one of the big difficulties is making people aware of the problems involved, as evidenced by not only the lack of response to the questionnaires, but by the large number of "don't knows" and comparatively few comments which were returned.

The Fishers were married Aug. 13, 1950, and had two children. A property settlement was approved and Fisher is to pay $300 per month support.

Three other divorce actions were heard earlier in the week. Shirlee Beyer, 37, 308 E. Spring St., was divorced from Alfred R. Beyer, 45, who is in the Outagamie County Hospital, Nov. 13, 1951, the couple had seven children. He is to pay $100 a month support.

A property settlement was approved in lieu of alimony in the divorce of Beite Gruentzel, 45, Saginaw, Mich., from Clarence F. Gruentzel, 49, 1220 N. Drew St., Appleton. Married Aug. 18, 1945, the couple had no children.

City Officials Urged To Attend Conventions

Mayor George Buckley has urged them to become active in the National League of Cities and participate in its annual congress of municipal officials. The push came from the city council which chided the mayor's attitude toward conventions if they are further than Chicago. Ald. William Wachtendonk (3rd) told the council during an informal budget review that "the time has come to settle this matter once and for all and stick by a practical policy". Wachtendonk said requests from throughout the municipal departments for conventions, institutes and seminars during the coming year added up to slightly more than $4,000. Should Be Permitted Wachtendonk said the committee of jurisdiction should determine whether the department head could attend and then send the recommendation to the finance committee for final approval. In the past Mayor Buckley has vetoed some convention requests and threatened to veto others. Unanimous Vote Wachtendonk said private industry felt it necessary to send seminars and the city is no different. By unanimous voice vote the council reaffirmed its policy. Mayor Buckley had no comment.

Dairy Plant Regulations Security Law Protects Farmer, Not Intended to Hurt Processor

By PAT DUFFEY
Post-Crescent Farm Editor

SEYMOUR — Provisions of the revised dairy plant security law enacted by the State Legislature this summer are intended to bolster the financial foundation of the dairy industry at a time when it faces major changes.

It was the first major revision since the measure was first enacted in 1939 when the state had 3,500 to 4,000 dairy plants.

The law is aimed at preventing losses to farmers resulting from financially insecure processors going out of business and represents no threat to most dairy plants.

This was the reassurance extended by Claire Jackson trustee and allocated to the from the Wisconsin Department of Agriculture's trade regulation other bills are paid. This system division to the Outagamie County Milk Quality Improvement Association this week at its quires $1.25 of securities for annual meeting here.

Many have followed plants and receiving more for this practice in the past but now their product. Milk from producing the state spells out more specifically in 1966 was valued at $651.1 million or an average of $777.852 per plant for each of the 337 purchasing plants. Farmers in 1966 extended $85.4 million in the state purchasing milk or credits to the plants in the form cream from producers must file of milk shipped prior to payment a statement of the plant's merit.

Every dairy plant operator in 1966 extended $85.4 million in the state purchasing milk or credits to the plants in the form cream from producers must file of milk shipped prior to payment a statement of the plant's merit.

Mid-year statements will be required to accompany applications for license renewal. Applicants for a new license won't be certified by the state until the department is satisfied financial requirements have been met.

Firms operating under a trusteeship also must have security equal to 75 per cent of their maximum indebtedness to the producers. About half the state's 1,016 licensed dairy plants last year filed financial statements. The other half used the trusteeship or some other verification system.

Under the trusteeship, payments for milk purchases are channeled through a bonded trustee and allocated to the individual producers before any of Agriculture's trade regulation other bills are paid. This system division to the Outagamie County Milk Quality Improvement Association this week at its quires $1.25 of securities for annual meeting here.

per producer during 1966. This is more than double the amount of a decade ago when there were more producers. The new law is intended to further protect this farmer investment, Jackson explained.

The record against losses in the state has been phenomenal, Jackson said. From 1947-65 the value of milk sold to Wisconsin dairy plants was $551.4 million of which only $72,000 was in default. The actual loss to producers due to defaults then was only $40,500. Part of the default was covered by securities or other equities.

The situation began to change in 1963-64 and studies were begun on possible changes in the law. The amount of default in those few plants that failed began to grow.

Only three of the state's 120 plants were in default this year. The amount was $403,000 at Elroy, $334,000 at Concord in Fond du Lac and a still undetermined amount at Plymouth. The losses in all cases are reduced by reserves and other equities.

While the department of agriculture can detect those plants which are in danger of faltering by their financial statements, it refrains from any public disclosure which might force a premature closing.

In the case of the Concord plant, he said, the department knew for three or four years the plant was in trouble but if it had closed then the farmers would have recovered little if any of the payments due them.

Instead, the department worked with plant officials to build an annual reserve fund. It helped soften the final blow.

A Completely Rebuilt Pipe Organ that once provided entertainment in the old Majestic Theatre, sounded out again today at the Emmanuel United Brethren Church. Research has disclosed that the instrument is quite rare, possibly one of only 40 of its kind in existence. It was purchased by the church in 1931 and today would cost about $35,000. Robert Stoll, an organ builder from Oshkosh, who has worked on the instrument since July, puts finishing touches on it. (Post-Crescent Photo)

Claim New Bridge Financing Plan Would Aid Valley

LaFave Would Shift Supplemental Aids to Bolster Building Fund

Special to The Post-Crescent
MADISON — A new proposal for financing bridge construction does not require a tax increase under the long-bridge act, has been submitted to the Senate Finance Committee by Sen. Ruben LaFave, R-Oconto. He said the most promising aspect of the proposal is that it does not require a tax increase under the long-bridge act. The bill is an amendment to his original plan for changing the long-bridge act.

In his original proposal, LaFave said the plan, if approved, would be of particular benefit to the Fox River Valley where there is the greatest current need for new bridges. The bill would do two things — guarantee highway aids to local communities at the June, 1967 level, and then earmark aids in excess of that level for the long-bridge construction fund.

$8 Million Annually
He said that based on the current economic level of the state, and future predicted growth, this would mean about $3 million annually for bridge construction. Under the present long-bridge act, the state provides $200,000 annually.

LaFave said the supplemental aids, which are derived from the gasoline tax, now result mainly from economic growth in the urban areas and from urban residents doing more traveling. However, most of this money goes back to the towns and villages. This, he said, amounts to only about $100 for the individual towns but collectively totals close to $3 million.

As chairman of the Senate Highway Committee, LaFave said he had discovered in research that the basic highway aids to towns and villages covered their needs and that the June, 1967, aids were the highest in state history. This level, he said, would continue to cover the local needs.

New Share Plan
Under current financing, costs of local bridges are now shared 50-50 by the county and community in which the bridge is located. The new plan would have the state pay one-third and the two local units each one-third. "This cost should be shared by the state since the bridges benefit the entire state and not just local traffic," LaFave said.

Teachers Union Appeals WERC Ruling on Pay

cities, but the commission dismissed the action. The WERC claimed representatives of the ATU and local chapter of the WEA had agreed to the school board of education.

It said the board was right in deducting pay from the ATU group while paying all teachers on Sept. 3 and 4, 1966, as June, 1967, aids were the highest provided in the school calendar, regardless of whether they attended the WEA convention.

Geenen, in his defense of the school board, contends that it did not interfere, restrain or coerce any of the teachers in its employ.

Written Argument
"The request of the ATU is tantamount to a request for the school board to commit unlawful and prohibited labor practices in shared by the state since the bridges benefit the entire state and not just local traffic," LaFave said.

An Anti-Vietnam War protester stands holding a banner-blockade Tuesday on the Lawrence University campus while another asks two members of a Naval recruiting team to allow two civilian autos to pass.

The military men refused the request of the protesters, members of the Students for a Democratic Society local unit, and were soon allowed to leave.

Newest Village Faces Big Challenge plant and dumping grounds. Existing laterals and mains would be used for the present.

The town of Cicero was faced with forming a sanitary district because of the pollution or having the Nichols community incorporate.

Incorporation seemed to be the wisest move.

Expenses, Taxes Equal
Expenses to the town and local taxes and shared taxes from the village were about equal, meaning town residents will feel no tax increase as the direct result of the village incorporation.

The village will get increased aids because of the incorporation, however. State shared tax for streets will jump from $440 per mile for township roads to $1,240 a mile for village streets. It also will receive a share of local income tax, $3.60 for each automobile registered in the village, 11 per cent of registration fees from all trucks normally kept in the village, a share of liquor taxes amounting to about $1.85 per capita and a share of utility taxes.

In addition the village will receive two per cent of fire insurance premiums paid by village property owners if the village maintains a fire department.

An 18-member volunteer department headed by Boman and made up of men living in the village, services the town. The department has an 800 gallon tanker-pumper combination truck and a 700 gallon tanker. Besides serving Nichols and Cicero, its protection sphere includes the north-east section of Maine and the south end of the Town of Lessor.

The Soo Line railway runs through the village. There is a five-room elementary school operated by the Seymour School district, a church, two grocery stores, a lumber company, post office, three taverns, a dance hall, service station and two small industries and a bank.

Boman indicated that several persons had expressed interest in settling in Nichols, but the impending state law suit had frightened them away. Village incorporation negated the suit against the township.

Heinemeyer best described the task facing village officials. "It will be a real big job this year, but we have been getting a lot of cooperation from the village and it should make our task easier," he said.

The 25-year-old Marine officer doubted that anti-war demonstrations had any effect on the morale of American troops in Vietnam. "They have more important things to be concerned with: things often involving possible loss of life and limb," he said. Capt. Cordial, Dignified
UW Probe Amazes
Madison Observers

BY JOHN WYNGAARD
Post-Crescent Staff Writer
MADISON — University of Wisconsin officials have been interrogated in an extremely cordial and dignified, if sober, manner by the state senate committee inquiring into the recent disorders on the University of Wisconsin campus.

This has come as a surprise to many persons, including probably many of those who impressions of legislative-university relations are based on the periodic outbursts of publicity-seeking legislators.

Thus far, in more than 30 hours of examination of leading University witnesses, the audience has not heard a cross word uttered.

Questioning is firm but polite. University men speak carefully but candidly. What started as an inquiry that was feared by some members of the University community may well turn out to be a constructive contribution to better understanding between the lawmakers at one end of State Street, and the University managers living through difficult times at the other end of that thoroughfare.

The riotous demonstrations that provoked the legislative inquiry and brought a storm of criticism throughout Wisconsin were perhaps most difficult for Chancellor William Sewell, who had taken his office little later than a month before the episode involving the Dow Chemical Co. interviewers. Sewell is understood to be keenly disappointed that when he asked for faculty backing on campus conduct rules adopted by the faculty only last spring after another troublesome incident, one third of his subordinates declined to support him.

Query to middle-aging alumni of the UW Remember when the University of Wisconsin student body was about one third of its present total of 33,000 and its police force consisted of a single officer?

The University security force now numbers 20 men, and its chief says that its strength is inadequate. At the height of the recent disturbances, Hanson had 70 officers at his side, including city and county police, and was dangerously out-manned.

When John Potter, the former Wood County legislator, was named to the state board of resource development a year ago, and later to the new state board of natural resources. Democrats charged that he could not effectively perform his duties because of his private associations.

Potter for several years has been a partner in a law firm which numbers paper mills among its clients, and paper mills are involved in pollution control programs.

But the issue, whatever its validity, will soon become academic. Potter is planning to withdraw from the firm to set up an independent practice.

Sen. Robert P. Knowles of New Richmond, president pro tem of the state senate, is among those who are anxious to avoid a legislative session next year. He has been invited by National Committeeman Robert Pierce, of Menomonie, to be his chief deputy in making the arrangements for the 1968 national Republican convention in Miami Beach in August and intends to leave for the convention city at the turn of the year. Pierce is general arrangements chairman for the 1968 convention, as he was in 1964 at San Francisco, where Knowles also served as his chief aide.

One result of their involvement in the convention machinery will be a fair assurance of good housing accommodations for Wisconsin delegates and visitors, something that Wisconsin Democrats have conspicuously failed to achieve at their national rallies in recent years.

It was in error that Gov. Knowles sent the name of Joseph Fagan, chairman of the state department of labor, industry and human relations to the senate for confirmation in a new term as department head.

But it turned out to be a fortuitous error for Fagan.

Politicians had speculated that Fagan might draw some important witnesses in opposition because of his militant advocacy of civil rights and his involvement in the troubles of Milwaukee. But only favorable witnesses appeared, and he got a unanimous vote of approval from the committee. Knowles then withdrew his name because legislative action was not required.

That the self-styled "red shirt" element among Wisconsin conservation have not forgiven or forgotten their defeat in opposing the enactment of the Kellett state government reorganization act was abundantly demonstrated at the annual banquet of the Wisconsin Wildlife Federation here.

Hailed as outstanding legislator of the year was a man who voted against the Kellett act because of the provision for the creation of a consolidated department of natural resources. Named conservationist of the year was a former member of the conservation commission who fought adamantly against the union of the conservation and resource development departments.

Meanwhile, the speech-making at the rally was virtually a call to battle to protect the men who opposed the natural resources board to which they were ultimately appointed, as they are considered by the state senate for confirmation.

Conspicuously absent at the dinner were two of the new board's seven members who backed the consolidation program.

The state senate's most junior member — in terms of service — has been allowed some unusually generous goodbyes by the leaders of that house. He is Sen. James Swan, of Walworth county, who was elected recently to replace the resigned George Borg.

Swan was permitted to succeed to the committee positions held by his predecessor, by courtesy of the GOP majority commanders with the result that he is occupying an important role as a new-comer. As an example, he is a member of the important legislative joint finance committee — and he has already shown that he is not timid about making himself heard there.

Tentative UAW-Chrysler Agreement Brightens Total Economic Picture

By JACK LEFLER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP)—A shadow hanging over the economy lightened this past week when Chrysler Corp. and the United Auto Workers Union agreed tentatively on a new labor contract.

The agreement was reached four hours before the Wednesday midnight strike deadline.

The UAW and Chrysler, the No. 3 automaker, were optimistic that the 95,000 workers covered by the pact would ratify it and a strike would be avoided.

However, much of Chrysler's production was shut down because thousands of union members jumped the gun and walked off their jobs before the agreement was reached. They remained off the job because of unsettled local disputes.

Walter P. Reuther, UAW president, said the union would try to get the strikers back to work as soon as possible.

Assembly Lines Roll
Ford Motor Co.'s assembly lines started to roll Monday for the first time since settlement two weeks ago of a UAW strike that began Sept. 6.

General Motors Corp., the world's biggest manufacturing firm, will be the next negotiating target of the UAW.

The Chrysler-UAW agreement was almost identical to the Ford contract. It would provide increased wages and fringe benefits of more than $1 an hour over the next three years. Under the old contracts workers averaged about $3.40 an hour in pay plus $1.30 an hour in fringe benefits.

Scattered work stoppages at Chrysler, and General Motors plants and a complete shutdown at Ford held estimated passenger car production this past week to 132,000 units, compared with 142,999 last week and 194,250 a year ago when the companies were in normal production.

GM Dividend
General Motors declared a year-end dividend of $1.25 a share on common stock, down from $1.50 a year ago. The dividend will bring the total GM payout to stockholders for 1967 to $3.80 a share, compared with $3.30 in 1966. The total payment implies for the economy as a to shareholders will be $1.085 a whole.

000,000 compared with $1,298,000,000 last year.

Some unfavorable reports on unemployment, factory orders and factory shipments came out this past week.

The unemployment rate climbed in mid-October to a two-year high of 4.3 per cent in September.

The number of unemployed rose last month to 2,951,000 from 2,895,000 the previous month.

Wait for Results
"Certainly this 4.3 per cent rate is a surprise," said Arthur M. Ross, labor statistics commissioner for the Labor Department. "But we should wait another month before making any firm judgments" about what it implies for the economy as a whole.

The Commerce Department reported that new factory orders fell in September by almost $1 billion in the deepest of three consecutive monthly declines. The new order total of $44,945,000,000 was down 2.1 per cent from $45.9 billion in August.

Factory shipments in September fell 2.7 per cent to $44,448,000,000 from $45,675,000,000 in August.

However, the Federal Reserve Bank of New York said the economy "has displayed considerable underlying strength in recent months despite the adverse effects of a number of strikes. Most observers expect a continuation of the over-all expansion, followed by a surge of activity when the automobile industry returns to full production," the bank added.

Building Costs Rise Rapidly

Second Only to Female Hemlines In Upward Trend

NEW YORK — The nation's building construction costs are climbing at a rate only slightly slower than women's hemlines.

Costs of building construction have gone up 2.5 per cent in the year ending Oct. 31, 1967, according to the F. W. Dodge Co., leading analyst of construction activity and producer of the Dow Building Cost Calculator.

The Northeastern and North Central states experienced the largest increase during the past year, according to the Dodge Co., with costs in those states rising an average of 3.1 per cent.

The Dow building cost survey, conducted each April and October, checks costs in 158 cities in the continental United States and 33 in Canada. "The basic reason for the increased building costs during the past year was an average six per cent increase in hourly wages for building trades craftsmen," Edgerton said. During the same period, building material costs rose a slight one-tenth of one per cent, he added.

Survey Says Business Conditions Are Better Now Than Last Spring
NEW YORK—Fortune's semi-annual survey, answered by more than 300 top executives across the nation, shows that a few more business leaders think conditions are "good" now than did last spring. But the number of optimists, today, is a lot smaller than either one or two years ago.

The executives report that they still have worries such as labor problems, now, higher taxes in six months and the Vietnam war. Inflation and tight money, however, concern them less now than last year.

With Pride in Their Differences

Nationality Groups Ready Folk Festival in Milwaukee

BY JEAN OTTO
Post-Crescent Women's Editor

MILWAUKEE—The French say "vive la difference". Wisconsin says it too, once a year at the annual Holiday Folk Fair at the Milwaukee Arena. Everyone aware of incidents across the nation during Troubled Summer 1967 knows that differences are not always a happy circumstance. Racial and nationality qualities more often precipitate dissension than unity.

But when November rolls around in Milwaukee, the differences that are part of varying backgrounds are pointed up with pride and a happy sense of returning to 'other places, other times'.

The Folk Fair is scheduled Nov. 17, 18 and 19, but in keeping with the old world tradition of folk parades through the European countryside, the opening of the fair was heralded with an Oct. 28 cavalcade, the only one of its kind in the country. The parade has religious significance in Europe, where the patron saint was moved to the fairgrounds about three weeks before the fair was held. There then followed a period of preparation, when foods and crafts were prepared for the fair.

The cavalcade in Milwaukee included more than 35 nationality groups riding on 23 carts or wagons, dressed in the costumes of their native lands. As in Europe, a period of bustling preparation is now taking place, as Americanized families with roots in other lands create the culinary concoctions for which they are famous, put the last stitches in their needlework masterpieces and polish the dances that speak the gaiety and joy of their nationalities.

As parades go, the procession probably wasn't one that would draw great crowds. About 200 people rode in the 23 carts and another 200 worked behind the scenes. All the participants met for lunch at Pabst Brewery before the procession and then came back to warm their hands and feet after the trip from the brewery to the Arena, where they had safely installed the legendary patron of brewing, King Gambrinus, who the rest of the year raises his stein in the Pabst courtyard.

The cavalcade was sponsored by the International Institute of Milwaukee, in cooperation with 35 nationality groups and Pabst. For the Institute, the Holiday Folk Fair is a bit like the dessert served after a hearty meal. Its work through the year is much more serious and just as rewarding as the Festival, which

About 60,000 people are expected to see the legendary patron of brewing, King Gambrinus, as he presides over the Holiday Folk Fair Friday, Saturday and Sunday at the Milwaukee arena. The 'King' was moved to the Arena three weeks in advance of the Fair, in keeping with the European tradition of autumn harvest festivals.

Mrs. Vlasta Vojta, above, was the first Folk Fair planner 24 years ago, and now serves as coordinator for all the cavalcade arrangements. The parade that assembled to announce the official beginning of the Folk Fair, although the program itself will not open until Friday, organized at Pabst Brewery and proceeded to the Arena. At left, some of the 35 nationality groups that participate in the Fair, gathered for the cavalcade. The attitude was festive, and the Blatz Band struck up a polka tune while couples danced in the courtyard waiting for the parade to start. Above, Ukrainian dancers polish up their technique in preparation for the Folk Spectacle to be presented five times during the three-day event.

White House Wedding an Historic Occasion

Lynda Johnson, Charles Robb Choose Attendants for East Room Rite

A wedding in the first family is bound to cause quite a stir, whether it be a royal family, or the family of the President of the United States. But a wedding in the White House is a special occasion of another magnitude.

Lynda Bird Johnson has chosen the historic East Room of the White House as the setting for her 4 p.m. Dec. 9 wedding to Marine Capt. Charles Robb of Milwaukee. If records are correct, Lynda will be the 16th bride, not all of them were President's daughters, to wed in the White House.

Episcopal Service
It will be an Episcopal service with the Rev. Canon

Gerald McAllister of San Antonio, Texas, officiating. Matron of honor will be the bride's sister, Luci. Mrs. Patrick J. Nugent, Luci was married in August, 1966, in Washington National Cathedral, but the reception will be held in the White House.

Warrie Lynn Smith, 23, of San Antonio, Tex., a close friend and roommate of Miss Johnson at the University of Texas has been chosen as maid of honor.

Bridegroom's Sister
Another sister of the couple will be in the wedding party. Miss Marguerite Temple Robb, 19, Milwaukee, sister of Capt. Robb, will be a bridesmaid.

The wife of a former White House social aide, Mrs. Jerrald Giles, 26, Springfield, Va., will also be in the party.

Other bridal attendants are Mrs. Thomas Curtis, 25, Lynda's long-time friend from Austin, Tex.; Phyllis Bonanno, 24, a secretary at McCall's Magazine in New York and a close friend of Lynda's since she started her job at McCall's a year ago, and Marie Fehmer, 27, Dallas, Tex., President Johnson's secretary.

Best Man Named
Capt. Robb has chosen as his best man another Marine captain, William Douglas Davidson, 26, Kershaw, S.C., who has been his roommate at the Marine barracks in Washington.

Patrick J. Nugent, 25, Lynda's brother-in-law, will be in the party.

A Wisconsin man, Neil Burmeister, 29, a college friend from the University of Wisconsin who now works in Pompano Beach, Fla., will be a groomsman.

Another of the bridegroom's long-time friends, William J. Foley II, 28, of Chagrin Falls, Ohio, and one of Lynda's long-time friends, Joseph E. Baston Jr., 23, a University of Texas law student, from Amarillo, Tex., are groomsman.

Senior Aide
Also in the party will be Air Force Capt. Frederick G. Widicus, 33, the senior Air Force social aide at the White House. Capt. Widicus is from Edwardsville, Ill.

Peter R. McCarthy, named an usher for the wedding, is now serving in Vietnam where Capt. Robb will be stationed early next year.

Lynda's wedding will no doubt be marked as the American social occasion of 1967. Dignitaries and diplomats from the United States and all over the world are expected to be guests at the winter affair.

Although the wedding will be slightly smaller than her younger sister's, it will be an event to inspire press coverage by national and European writers and photographers.

Miss Johnson and Charles Robb

Marie Fehmer, above, the President's secretary, and Mrs. Tom Curtis, right, daughter of the general manager of the Johnson family radio and television interests, have been chosen as bridesmaids for Lynda's wedding.

The historic East Room of the White House, above, will be the scene of the Dec. 9 wedding of the President's eldest daughter, Lynda, and Capt. Charles S. Robb of the Marines. The daughters of Presidents Woodrow Wilson, Theodore Roosevelt and John Tyler also were wed in the East Room. Lynda Bird Johnson may be the 16th bride to marry in the White House.

Neil J. Burmeister, Madison, left, is a member of the wedding party and a former fraternity brother of Charles Robb at the University of Wisconsin.

League School Budget Study To Result in Recommendation

Appleton League of Women voters will go on record Wednesday evening in regard to the 1968 school budget when they appear at a public meeting of the City Council. The statement will follow a consensus made after a study of the school budgeting policy, carried out since early June under the chairmanship of Mrs. Joseph Dercks.

Arriving at the point at which they are ready to make a recommendation on policy is a painstaking and thorough process for the League of Women Voters, which is strictly non-political in nature and focuses on issues rather than party or personality.

The decision to make a "Continued Analysis of Appleton City Government with Emphasis on Budget and Financing Practices of Both City and School System" was made at the annual League meeting in April. The committee working with Mrs. Dercks got together for the first time early in June, and met every two weeks throughout the summer and early fall.

Narrowed Subject

After a general look at city financing, the committee decided to focus on school financing and budgeting. Topics researched by the committee were 1967-68 teacher salary schedules; federal aid programs in Appleton and other Wisconsin cities; C.E.S.A. activities and unified school district financing. The committee also investigated Appleton's method of choosing a school architect; and the mechanics of school board budget preparation. Facts were also gathered comparing city and school tax rates and per pupil cost in other state cities.

In order that all League members might become familiar with financial terms involved in the study, the committee prepared a glossary for general membership use. Then, so informed, League planned a discussion with the experts. On Sept. 27 a public meeting was held, with speakers Henry Shreve, Alvin Tews, City Council finance committee chairman; Charles Buchanan, school board president, and William Spears, superintendent of schools. All were sent questions in advance of the meeting, so they could have at hand information League members requested. About 110 attended the meeting, with questions from the audience following the presentation.

Smaller Groups

At least 80 per cent of League then met in unit sessions, where each studied and discussed independently of the other groups criteria for judging a school budget. All four unit groups agreed on the four points compiled by Mrs. Dercks and the committee and approved by the LWV board of directors. A consensus was made, and went to the local action chairman Mrs. Daniel Crowley and first vice president Mrs. Douglas Johnson. They, along with Mrs. Dercks, have attended budget committee meetings, and will be League spokesmen Wednesday evening.

Among points which influenced the League consensus and viewpoint are a breakdown in percentages of the 1967 public school expense budget League found that 74.1 per cent of the budget is slated for instruction, including principals, teachers, secretaries, library books and teaching supplies; 3.6 per cent for capital outlay, including improvements to sites and buildings, service systems and equipment; 2.9 per cent for maintenance, including maintenance crews, repairs or transportation, with a change in 1968 because of the new law.

Other Costs

Community services, including those of custodian, account for 7 per cent of the budget. Food services, including school lunch program, 1 per cent; outgoing transfers for handicapped, .04 per cent; operation, including switchboard operator, stock clerk, truck drivers, custodial staff, utilities and cleaning, 10.6 per cent; and fixed charges, such as insurance and medical exams, 2.9 per cent. Also included in the budget are 2.0 for administration; .9 per cent, health services; .4 per cent, attendance service, and .06 per cent, interscholastic athletics.

A school board member describes budget-making procedure as follows: The budget is drawn up during the summer for the next year — Jan. 1 to Jan. 1, and is based on requests from principals, department heads and teachers for new equipment. Such requests must be turned in by the end of the current school year. Items are screened by the school superintendent and the business manager and then sent to the Board of Education, which screens and cuts, and formulates the budget document. The finance committee of the city council receives the document in September and may recommend deletions, but cannot force the School Board to remove specific items. The budget is then returned to the board of education and, in November, the recommended budget is voted upon by the City Council and adopted.

How Obtained

Funds for school use come from: local taxes, 83.21 per cent; state aid, 11.07 per cent; utility taxes, 2.08 per cent; federal aids, 1.64 per cent; county aids, 1.54 per cent; and miscellaneous, .46 per cent.

The consensus at which League arrived states:

"The Appleton League of Women Voters, recognizing that the Appleton school budget should reflect the community's ability to pay as indicated by the average annual income and the equalized evaluation behind each pupil, supports:

"Establishing and keeping teachers' salaries competitive with those of school districts in our area as well as throughout the state

"Equalizing educational opportunities by a consistent policy of striving for uniform facilities and equipment throughout the system

"Considering the use of the services of a professional budget analyst responsible to the city council."

In making recommendations and taking the stand it will set forth at the City Council meeting Wednesday evening, League representation brings to the subject as much study and background as possible. Its opinion reflects serious purpose and a dedication to informing members and the public and symbolizes the League principle that citizenship means responsibility

Precautions Eliminate Potential Fire Hazards

BY LUCY CRAIG
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

But under the right circumstances, each one can be changed into a destructive, and often deadly, power.

"Few people are aware of fire safety and unsafety principles around their homes and farms," stated Robert Matzat, Madison, Rural Insurance Company representative who gave a demonstration of fire precaution Tuesday at Outagamie County Homemakers' World Community Day at Black Creek.

"Approximately 37 per cent of the fires in rural areas in the state," he said, "are caused by lightning. The other 63 per cent, in most cases, can be traced to human carelessness or neglect."

Faulty Wiring

He cited smoking in bed and faulty wiring as primary causes of home fires. Spontaneous combustion, over-fusing and again, faulty wiring, were named as the causes of destruction to farm buildings.

"When something is marked 'flammable' on the container," Mr. Matzat stated, "there is a good reason for it."

He emphasized his point by lighting a match and holding it to the fine liquid he forced out of a can of hair spray. Instantly, the innocent looking spray was changed into a fiery fluid torch.

"When a woman sees something like this," he continued, "we hope she will think twice before she smokes a cigarette while using it."

"She will, she will," said a soft voice in the audience.

Extension cords running under rugs in many homes have often been rubbed bare. One small spark is all that is necessary to start a destructive fire.

Danger Points

Other danger points mentioned by the speaker, were oily rags, rubbish piles, improperly stored paints and paint thinners and a too-old or over-burdened furnace.

"It's recommended that every family have at least one fire-extinguisher in the home," he stated. "However, it's a hard decision to make, as it is one of the items that a home owner hopes he will never have to use. It is much like deciding to go to the dentist. One knows it should be done and that he will be happier and safer after doing it, yet he still hesitates."

Manufacturers are wooing the householder with light, compact versions of the professional extinguisher.

"They are even manufacturing them in several colors for the decor-conscious woman," added Mr. Matzat.

House fires have been classified into three types. There is the ordinary penetrating fire in wood, paper or textiles; the surface fire of flammable liquids or grease, and the fire involving electrical equipment where the power is still turned on.

Water is the most available and the cheapest fire extinguisher. However, it can't be used on all fires. It will actually spread the flames of a grease fire.

It is important to place the extinguisher in an easily accessible spot known to all family members. If ever used it must be returned to the same place.

"Harmless" grain dust is a potential explosive. If it is subjected to heat for any length of time, it may explode into flames. This often happens, explained Mr. Matzat, in a granary when the fine dust collects on light bulbs that burn for several hours.

The average house operates on approximately 220 volts of electricity.

"When lightning strikes a home," said Mr. Matzat, the normal voltage is increased by 2,000 times. If the home is equipped with lightning rods, this voltage is grounded. However, if not grounded, the building usually is consumed by flames in a relatively short time.

Mr. Matzat concluded that precaution and the knowledge of what to do in an emergency can save a family a great deal of expense and heartache.

A Piece of Paper Placed over bare, connected wires bursts into flame, demonstrating the importance of insulated wire in the home. Many extnesion cords especially those under rugs, have been rubbed bare and are potential danger spots. (Post-Crescent Photos)

Robert Matzat, Madison, of the Rural Insurance Co., demonstrates how 'harmless' hairspray can be turned into a fiery torch. The fine spray is highly flammable. He cautioned women against using the spray when smoking. However, the flammable qualities are lessened after the spray dries.

is annually attended by about 60,000 Wisconsinites.

The Institute concerns itself with the assimilation of immigrants into this country, while helping them hold the heritages and traditions that have given them a unique history. The Institute holds language classes, sponsors theater and dance groups, arranges for European visitors to see typical American homes and helps new Americans in whatever ways are needed. The Folk Fair proceeds go toward the maintenance of Institute programs.

For Pleasure

Albert Davis, director of the International Institute for 10 years, says the Fair is solely for entertainment, and has no other reason for being. It is an effort and an experiment in communication and understanding, and its success means enjoyment for all.

This is the 24th year of the Fair, which now features three generations in some of its groups. Ages of those participating range from teens to grandmothers. They treasure their costumes, most made by hand and painstakingly authentic, and keep alive the music and dances that have been done by generations before them.

The parade was informal and gay, a sort of preview of the Fair itself. Walking along the line as groups assembled was like stepping onto the docks in New York, where a number of languages fall on the ear all at the same time.

'Round the World

The Fair itself promises to be a world-wide panorama of sight, sound and aromas. The Sidewalk Cafe Caravansary will be in full swing when the fair opens at 5 p.m. Friday and continues through the 11 a.m. to 11 p.m. hours Saturday. It will serve its last order, which may include food from any one of 32 countries, as the Fair ends at 10 p.m. Sunday.

The folk spectacle has a 'Me and Marco Polo' theme this year, in keeping with its choice of a young Japanese lady, Miss Irene Jonokuchi, as official Fair hostess. In Bruce Hall at the Arena the Oriental splendor of the Far East will keep tempo with the clomp of bamboo instruments and the tones of temple bells. Folk dance performances are scheduled at 6:30 and 8 p.m. Friday and at 5:30 and 7:30 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. Seats may be reserved for a very small charge.

For Children

A children's matinee is planned at 1:30 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. It is called "Stories Told and Untold, by Sheherazade."

Dancing will take place in the Old World Gardens, with folk entertainers, snacks and refreshments offered in Kilbourn, Juneau and Engelmann Halls.

A children's foreign Film Festival will take place every hour from 6 to 8 p.m. Friday and from 1 to 6 p.m. Saturday and Sunday in Plankinton Hall on the upper level.

As a service to area hospitals to upgrade the position of nursing assistant, the District 12 Vocational, Technical and Adult Education board is conducting a survey of need for a course of training for nursing assistants in general hospitals and skilled nursing homes.

With area hospital facilities growing rapidly and the resultant increase in patient census, there is a substantial need for trained nurse assistants.

The need for setting forth a uniform program and policy for nursing assistant training programs has been recognized for several years. Under the Manpower Development and Training Act of 1962, at the request of the State Board of Vocational and Adult Education and in cooperation with the Wisconsin State Board of Health, the State Board of Training Nursing Assistants.

Program Purpose

The purpose of the program is to train employees or pre-service persons to perform supportive nursing tasks which are both safe for the patient and practical for nursing service. In situations where skilled nursing is essential, they will assist the registered professional and licensed practical nurse.

Training courses for nursing assistants, with instructional cost and clinical supervision furnished by local vocational, technical and adult schools, have been conducted for the past two years in Kaukauna, Appleton and Oshkosh.

Stay with Work

In the Appleton school, 100 students have been enrolled in this training program from September, 1966, to October, 1967. Of the original enrollees, 77 are still employed in the same facility in which they were trained, four are employed elsewhere but still as nursing assistants, five have entered nursing schools, and four have gone into educational programs of higher learning but will continue as nursing assistants as summer jobs. Of the original students, 90 nursing assistants have been added

Mrs. Betty Zwicker and William Sirek, director of District 12 Area Vocational, Technical and Adult Education, discuss preparations for the district's nursing assistants training course. Mrs. Zwicker is coordinator-instructor of the course. The class schedule for 1968 is expected to begin soon after the first of the year. (Post-Crescent Photo)

be set up to accommodate the number of trainees the area hospitals request. Mrs. Zwicker states that classes should begin soon after the first of the year.

Persons wishing to train as nursing assistants must be employed by one of the facilities in the area, or have the assurance of a job after training. Mrs. Zwicker emphasizes that the program is designed to upgrade present and future employees of area institutions, rather than turn out volumes of trained nurse assistants.

The length of the course will be either four five-day weeks or eight two-day weeks. It includes about 60 hours of classroom instruction, demonstration, and return demonstration and 30 to 60 hours of supervised clinical practice in the health facility work situation.

empty. They were much happier when they were scrimping and struggling to pay bills.

May I suggest something that will surely lift their spirits and make others happy, too? I know it will work because it has done wonders for my husband and me.

Call the local orphanage and ask if you can take a child or two on Sunday. Youngsters who live in an institution simply adore having dinner in a family home, with flowers on the table and the conversation centered around them. After dinner they can take in a movie, or play games, or motor to the country.

I'll never forget one little girl who clung to my apron while I made dinner. She never left my side. I learned later that her own mother had deserted her when she was four and she wanted so much to have a mommy.

There are thousands of children who are starved for love and affection. And there are at least as many people who are bored and restless and in need of something to give their lives meaning and fulfillment. Please get them together. — Mrs. Rita C.

Dear Mrs. C: Thank you for an excellent suggestion. How many of you out there had forgotten there were still orphanages? True, some orphanages have been closed but many still exist. If there is no orphanage in your city, call a welfare agency. Every community has neglected children who hunger for attention.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: Give me your opinion of a 41-year-old man (supposedly sane) who turns off the ignition of the car while his wife is driving on a busy highway because he gets mad at her for losing her way. The man is unable to drive because of a physical disability. His wife was taking him to the Veterans Hospital for a checkup. Neither of them was familiar with the freeways and when she missed the exit and wound up on the wrong road he said "I'll fix you, you idiot," and turned off the ignition. Fortunately she was able to turn it on again before they had an accident.

The man is my husband and I would like your opinion of him. — Still Shaking

Dear Still: My opinion is that he is a nut. And a dangerous one at that. Anyone who has such a violent temper is a threat to society. I suggest professional help. He needs to ventilate his anger in socially acceptable ways before he ends up killing himself and perhaps a few others.

Child's 'Right to Life' Called Inalienable

Deanery Delegate Attends Family Life Abortion Conference

BY CAROL HANSON
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

"Any child conceived has a right to be born, to live a full life and attain heaven."

These are the feelings of Mrs. Gordon Gehrman, 134 S. Lincoln St., Kimberly, president of the Outagamie Deanery, who attended a conference on abortion Oct. 26-27 at the Sheraton-Park Hotel, Washington, D.C. The conference was sponsored by the Family Life Bureau of the Catholic Church. Delegates represented states that have abortion legislation pending in their legislatures.

The conference was preceded by an International Conference on Abortion Sept. 6-8 in Washington, D.C., sponsored by the Harvard Divinity School and the Joseph P. Kennedy Foundation. It was attended by scholars of theology, law, medicine, ethics and social sciences, as well as prominent public figures. The delegates attempted to weigh the impact of scientific data in the formulation of ethical judgment.

Conferences Timely

Both of these conferences were timely in view of the fact that many states in the U.S. are re-examining their abortion laws. Laws today generally prohibit abortion except in cases where it is necessary to save the mother's life or attempt to prevent serious threats to the mother's life.

The movement to relax abortion laws began in the early 1950s. In 1959, when the American Law Institute published its proposal for relaxing abortion laws, the momentum gained significantly.

Mrs. Gehrman pointed out that the conference considered one of the serious aspects of much pending legislation is that it is based on the American Law Institute's Model Penal Code.

The code, she said, would allow abortion in cases where pregnancy "represents a serious threat to the mental and emotional health of the mother, where pregnancy is the result of rape or incest, or where there is a probability of fetal anomaly, providing that condition warrants such a course of action."

Wisconsin has legislation pending. At present, it is among states that allow legal abortion only when the mother's life is in danger.

Moral Issue

Mrs. Gehrman is deeply aware of the moral issue involved in legal abortion. The question, she said, that kept coming up in discussions was "at what point does life begin?" Wisconsin now considers an unborn child "a human being from the time of conception until it is born alive."

For centuries, according to Juan J. Ryan, a New Jersey attorney, "jurisprudential opinion was influenced by the erroneous scientific theory which taught that for some time after impregnation the developing embryonic life remained a physical part of the mother." At that time even Blackstone, the accepted authority in Anglo-Saxon law, wrote that "Life . . . begins in contemplation of law as soon as an infant is able to stir in the mother's womb."

Begins at Conception

Because of new scientific information, most law now agrees that life begins at conception.

Mrs. Gehrman said that many conference participants believed "abortion kills a child."

The Model Penal Code which points to "the serious threat to the mental and emotional health of the mother" was thoroughly considered by the Family Life Conference. The resounding question was the child's right to life. The conference was in general agreement that psychiatric help and good counseling from the family physician would help a woman with mental problems more than an abortion. Might not a woman who aborted her baby, they asked, have deeper feelings of guilt that would bring forth a greater mental problem?

One of the discussion groups that involved Mrs. Gehrman considered the lack of help available for people who have socio-economic problems. Public psychiatric and guidance clinics are usually busy at the precise time when these people are considering abortion. Delegates felt that the problem could be met better if social welfare assistance was immediately available.

The second recommendation of the Code was for abortion in cases of incest and rape. The conference considered the small number of women who actually experience pregnancy as the result of this. The Catholic Church, as well as other denominations opposed to abortion, and most state laws permit a woman who has been raped or impregnated as the result of incest, to contact her physician and undergo an immediate treatment. However, when a pregnancy does occur, it is felt that the unborn child would be the innocent third party, who would suffer the consequences caused by an immoral act.

Innocent Third Party

Mrs. Gehrman pointed to a case, discussed at the conference, of a married woman who was raped, became pregnant, and was not allowed by law to be aborted. She and her husband decided to go through with the pregnancy to protect the law. She delivered and the baby was placed for adoption. The point Mrs. Gehrman said was made was that the woman did not suffer physical harm from the delivery, that people in the community where she lived were sympathetic to her, and the baby was given his right to life. From a moral wrong, good effects resulted.

The conference also dealt with the third recommendation of the Model Penal Code, the probability of fetal anomaly. Strides are being made in the development of various methods and techniques for correcting defects of all kinds after a child's birth. A test is now available to determine if a fetus is physically abnormal. New vaccines for German measles have been developed and, in the foreseeable future, this disease should no longer play a part in the malformation of babies.

Members of the conference questioned whether liberalized abortion laws in cases where a baby might be born with a physical or mental deficiency might not lead to mercy killing of any individuals who are deformed, aged or infirm. Can we take the responsibility for drawing the line and holding it once a liberalized moral view of abortion becomes an accepted part of society, they asked.

Leonard Carlin, a lawyer from Colorado, was one of the conference speakers. Of a liberalized abortion bill passed in his state in April, 1967, he stated that, medically, there was no reason for legalizing the law, and legally, the new law creates more problems than it solves. Further, he said, it is morally wrong. In the four and one-half months since the law went into effect 36 of the first 70 abortions were for psychiatric reasons. These 70 abortions represent a 500 per cent increase in legal abortions.

Mr. Carlin suggested to the Day Saturday-Crescent C 8

November 12, 1967

delegates that they should work for inclusion of a residence requirement in their state laws. Of the 70 abortions that have taken place in Colorado, 40 per cent have been non-resident. He further suggested that they attempt to have as many amendments as possible tacked onto the bills, in an effort to weaken them and block passage.

The Rev. James T. McHugh, director of the Family Life Bureau, has stated the position of the Catholic Church. "Abortion means terminating the life of an unborn child, one who possesses the potentiality of developing in the womb of his mother, and in due time, taking his place in the world as a human person. It brings to an end with irreversible finality both the existence and the destiny of the developing human person."

Rev. McHugh continued, "We feel that man's responsibility is to eliminate the bases of evil, ignorance and injustice, rather than to provide for an easier termination of developing human life."

She Explores Underwater Frontiers

BY JACKIE KRUG
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

Of the few wild frontiers of nature that remain unspoiled by man's hand of progress, the vast coral reefs that dot the warm ocean waters off the Virgin Islands and the West Indies are perhaps the most beautiful and the most exciting to explore.

Mrs. Louis Wise, an ardent snorkel swimmer, finds the reefs a relaxing study in beauty. In September Mrs. Wise took an 8-day cruise aboard the Maverick, an authentic old sailing vessel, decorated with teak wood and brass, that navigates among the British Virgins.

Passengers Help
The ketch carries 12 passengers, a crew of five, one sea turtle, a parrot and a dog, all pets of the owners. Passengers take part in some of the tasks of sailing the ship, such as scrubbing decks and raising and lowering the sails.

When the Maverick puts in for the night, Mrs. Wise puts out to sea with snorkel gear in search of the underwater beauty. Mrs. Wise states that the warm sea waters are clear to a depth of about 25 feet and from cruising along the surface one can view the underwater forest of red, orange and lavender corals.

Mrs. Wise also finds enjoyment in the variety of creatures that inhabit the underwater coral world. She describes multi-colored fishes with interesting facial expressions." Mrs. Wise says that part of the excitement is that "you never know what you're going to meet up with next." Once, while swimming off the Florida Keys she came face to face with a shark, but explains that it was "only a baby."

Some Dangers

The peaceful underwater world does offer some dangers, such as the moray eel or the fire coral which when touched burns the flesh, but Mrs. Wise states that these are avoided by just being careful.

Mrs. Wise's interest in sea life and its beauties began when she was a youngster on the West Coast. She explains that low tide left pools of water along the beaches and the pools were inhabited by small sea creatures that had been caught when the tide went out.

Some years later Mrs. Wise read "The Silent World" by Jean Cousteau, inventor of the aqua lung, and that got her started. Besides the September cruise in the Virgins, Mrs. Wise has explored several other areas including Pennecamp State Park off the Florida Keys.

Conservation Concern

Pennecamp is a conservation area in which no one is allowed to destroy the coral or fish that live there. Mrs. Wise is deeply concerned with the conservation of these underwater areas of natural beauty and expresses some fear that they may one day become polluted, as many inland waters have been.

Mrs. Wise states that the "loveliest reef of all" is located off Buck Island just north of St. Croix Island in the Virgins. The staghorn coral there stand as much as 12 feet high and the huge brain coral reaches six feet high. Mrs. Wise judges the beauty of the various reefs she has viewed by their color, formation and the variety of the creatures that live there.

Mrs. Louis Wise, 108 N. Green Bay St., displays her snorkel equipment as she talks of her adventures exploring the coral reefs off the Virgin Islands. Mrs. Wise spent eight days in September cruising the islands aboard the ketch Maverick.

Do You Know What the Hartley Health Toner Does?

Hartley Health Toner is an amazing electrical device that jars nerves and muscles with low amperage current to get them to do jobs they are no longer capable of doing themselves. Everyone knows that our bodies generate electrical impulses. This is how our body moves. It sends impulses to the brain. Our body can only generate about one-half volt. Sometimes when we are afflicted with illness, our body cannot generate even this amount; thus the reason Hartley Health Toner is so amazing; it helps these impulses work. "We have worked with paralyzed people and got them up and walking," reports Mrs. Jo Mischke, consultant, adding that "We also helped people with nerve deafness. In some cases, hearing was restored with one treatment." Hundreds of people throughout this area have been using the Hartley Health Toner in programs of daily massage to alleviate pain and discomfort of poor circulation, rheumatism, emphysema and arthritis. Mr. Hartley, owner and manufacturer of the Health Toner, points out, however, that he ascribes no medical miracles to his device, but he has studied other electrical massage devices on the market and his differs from most of the others in that he uses an alternating rather than a direct current. He also uses an adjustable voltage with a low current (amperes). He believes that current promotes better circulation and that many health problems are related to poor circulation.

You are invited to contact the firm to arrange for a personal demonstration, and try it out on our Rental Plan. For complete information on this amazing new technique of alleviating pain, contact the Hartley Health Toner Center, 315 W. College Ave., Appleton, Wis. or phone 734-3761. Open daily 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Saturday 9 a.m. to 12 Noon. ADV

Educational Forums Set For Home Economists

BY COLLEEN CHRISTENSEN
Extension Home Economist

A series of forums for former home economists is planned in the Appleton area. The purpose of the forums is to update professional home economists in homemaking.

Miss Christensen

The emphasis will be on the home economist not presently employed. It is hoped that through the forums, they might become aware of changes in the field of home economics and the opportunities for continuing education, employment and community service.

The series of forums is tentatively set to begin in the spring of 1968. The task now is to compile a list of all qualified home economists in the area. Home economics graduates have been asked to write or call the University Extension Office at the Court House before Wednesday. The following information is needed: name; address; college or university; approximate year graduated, and present position.

Anyone interested in attending the forum series may contact the office anyway, and will be put on a mailing list for newsletters or releases which may interest you at a later date.

There are state and national affiliated organizations for all home economists. The Wisconsin Home Economics Association, as a part of the American Home Economics Association, offers individual or group membership to home economists with a bachelor's degree. The Home Economists in Homemaking (HEHM) provides a group rate to eight or more persons interested in joining the American Home Economics Association (AHEA). Each member receives a newsletter and a membership card. A journal of Home Economics is provided for each eight members. The HEHM has these aims:

- 1) to provide activity in the field of home economics
- 2) to assist and promote programs designed for professional and social betterment
- 3) to promote friendships among home economists

Ranch Garden Gives Private Outdoors

BY ANDY LANG

Today's requirement of increased privacy and additional outdoor living space is fulfilled here in a most interesting manner.

Taking the popular U-shaped plan as a starting point, architect Rudolph A. Matern has thrown an eye-catching wall on across the front, creating a 32' by 16' outdoor area to be used as the individual owner prefers.

A portion of the wall is solid brick, while the balance is of decorative wrought iron. The iron is of sufficiently small and active pattern to make it a visual barrier, yet open enough to cut off a breeze. In this large space — surrounded by the main part of the house, the bedroom wing and the two-car garage — is a suggested shower stall. Also in that area is the stairway to the basement.

Although generally open to the sky, this area has a flat roof covering the walk to the double-door front entrance, and another door running along the wall to connect the garage to the front walk. All together, it is practical room as well as a private bath. with two of its five closets moves across the flagstone an unusually large linen closet in flooring of a foyer that controls the bedroom hall. James L. Cooper, Cincinnati, said in the suit that he was permanently injured Aug. 13 when he swerved to avoid hitting the dog and his motorcycle ran off a country road. The suit named as defendants Louis and Ida Goede of Glen Este, described as the beagle's owners.

The Ailing House Motel Ideas Adaptable For Living at Home

BY ROGER C. WHITMAN
It isn't often that I see the inside of a motel. I like motels. A "john" and tub-shower are in one section and the lavatory in another. Motel planners certainly deserve full credit for this contribution to sensible living. Should be a must for any commuter's home, seems to me!

Need Quiet
More than anything else, weary travelers stop at a motel to rest. So neon and glitter mean a lot less than a good dinner, comfortable bed and Q-U-I-E-T. Of course, a motel can't help the highway hubbub. Nor can anyone do anything about late arrivals and early departers who slam car doors, while conversing far above a whisper. No different from many neighbors we all probably know.

But when building the motel, like a house, why not build in some natural quiet instead of noise?

"Her" Desk
My wife thought that was a nice way to give a housewife her own desk area! Even if there's limited room space, she has enough room for clothes in the drawers. And she can sit down and do her writing and accounts at a place all her own.

If you have two good, low chests of drawers, you can achieve the same effect. Place them 2 feet apart and cover them with a single sheet of formica-topped plywood. Hang any size mirror you want above, and there you are.

Another excellent bit of planning is now standard design for new motel construction. It's every bit as good an idea for any new house or remodeling. This is having the "double-duty" bath-

for millions of self-employed
... are you one of them?

Ask your New York Life Agent about tax-favored pension plans for self-employed business and professional men.

There's good news for some 9 million self-employed persons and for their employees, too! Under the "Keogh Law," you now get tax breaks previously not possible on funds you set aside towards retirement. And New York Life has a plan to help you make the most of this new law — a plan declared by the Internal Revenue Service to be acceptable for use by self-employed individuals or groups.

Let's say that you are a professional man or that you own your own business. Thanks to this new law, a significant percentage of the money you provide for a pension under this qualified plan is now tax-deductible. That's one benefit: your New York Life Agent can show you two more. He'll demonstrate that only life insurance or annuities provide a guaranteed income for life . . . only life insurance provides protection for your family before you retire.

Here's an opportunity not to be missed. When your New York Life Agent calls, ask him to explain the plan and which type of insurance or annuity policy best fits your retirement ideas.

Sonic Booms Make Physical, Economic Pain

Insurance Firms Fear Wave of Claims Of Noise Damage

By JOHN CUNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — A boom of another kind, not an economic boom but one in which impact and mechanics may be even more readily understood, will burst upon our heads in the 1970s.

This is the sonic boom, a blast of sound waves created when aircraft fly faster than the speed of sound. It can shatter plate glass, plaster and other property, but above all it can shatter nerves of man and animal.

It is also perhaps the greatest headache that lies ahead for builders and operators of the huge commercial jets that are expected to be soaring through the skies at speeds of more than 1,800 miles an hour.

British, French, Soviet and U.S. interests are now working on their models, all of which will be sleek, comfortable and quiet within, but incredibly loud without.

As a result, mankind is presented now with another round in the endless contest with the products of his own technology. The contest is clearly defined: man demands speed in going from one place to another; he has an innate urge, often unsatisfied, to peace and quiet also.

Will the noise be banned? Or will man be forced to listen? The expert opinion now concludes that the loud plane will win. They feel there is an inevitability about it, for technology generally has won in the past, as witness the air, water and sound pollution that already ex-

For the present anyway, federal officials feel the public can adjust to the noise, citing as evidence man's adjustment to the introduction of other brand-new noises in the past.

Individuals tend to accommodate themselves to an initially disturbing noise once it becomes a pattern of daily life," the Federal Aviation Agency says.

Adjust to Noise

"There are noises today in cities and in small towns that are taken for granted which, if they were introduced as new noises, would cause disturbances for an initial period of time," the agency adds.

This conclusion provokes outraged rebuttals from sociologists, medical men, property owners and residents who live near airports, all of whom contend that although man may tolerate air noises, his adjustment to them is less than perfect.

The problem of shock waves also is causing great concern among some of the insurance fraternity, who feel they will be deluged with claims for damage, much of which they will be unable to prove or disprove as caused by the boom.

Proof of damage from sonic blasts has been fairly easy to establish so far because tests have been restricted to precise geographical areas.

MRT Cast Named for 'Streetcar'

MILWAUKEE — "A Streetcar Named Desire," Tennessee Williams' haunting story of a faded southern belle who rides a metaphorical streetcar to a destination of despair, will open at the Milwaukee Repertory Theater at 8 p.m. Thursday.

This Williams drama of frustration and frantic clinging to gentility was the playwright's second big success, following upon "The Glass Menagerie," which the Repertory presented two seasons ago.

Williams places "A Streetcar Named Desire" in the French quarter of New Orleans where streetcars bore such names as "Desire" and "Cemetery," two words which set the emotional time of his play. His heroine, Blanche DuBois, a frustrated school teacher who still views herself as a sweet magnolia even though her conduct has driven her from her job, seeks refuge in the tenement of her married sister and the latter's lusty, brawling husband. Conflicts intensify in the cramped slum and lead to a crashing finale of dissolution and oblivion for Blanche.

"Streetcar" is directed by Eugene Lesser, the theater's new resident director who gave the Repertory its record-breaking "The Merchant of Venice" last season.

Played By Newcomer Blanche will be played by a newcomer to the professional resident company this season, Penelope Reed, who was seen as Emilia in this year's opening production, "Othello." It is a role first made famous by Jessica Tandy and later played by Uta Hagen, Vivien Leigh and many other leading actresses.

The role of the burly brother-in-law, Stanley, originally played by Marlon Brando, will be enacted by Michael Fairman, who won a Repertory following in "The Sudden and Accidental Re-education of Horse Johnson."

Stella, Blanche's sister who finds happiness with the uncouth Stanley, is to be played by Rhoda B. Carroll, now in her second season at the Repertory. Gentle Mitch, whom Blanche might have married if Stanley had not revealed her past, will be portrayed by Charles Kimbrough, remembered in the title role of "The Miser" last season. Others in the "Streetcar" cast are Marc Alaimo, Frank Borgman, Marnie Galoway, Katy Hartnett, Diana Kirkwood, Maggie Olesen, David Palmer, and Michael Parish.

thor Kaften, president of the board of the museum, made the $150 WBAY award to Mrs. Hagemeyer.

In addition to taking the Best in Show award, Mrs. Hagemeyer was named winner of one of the merit awards in the graphic arts category. Her charcoal "Age of Protest," was selected along with an etching entitled "Suspension" by Mrs. M. J. Schmidt for the graphic arts merit awards.

Mrs. Patricia Ellis-Caines, the Operation Area Arts sculpture instructor, was a winner in the painting category for an oil, "Seated Nude." David Hodge, of Oshkosh, won the other painting award for a polymer collage entitled "Seaward, Alaska."

In the sculpture category Wayne J. Gunville, Green Bay, won an award for "successor," a head made of electrical components. Milton K. Gardner, Oshkosh, was cited for a merit award for his bronze sculpture, "Subplot II."

Prize for Watercolor University of Wisconsin Green Bay Center art instructor Robert A. Ray took an award for his watercolor "Design" and LaVerne Rhodes Hine of Green Bay won merit recognition for "Autumn Grandeur" in watercolor.

Stoneware pieces were selected for the two crafts awards. "Trophy Pot" by Paul S. Donhauser, Oshkosh, and "Umbrella Stand" by Robert L. Fritz, a potter who teaches at the Green Bay and Marinette university centers, were the winning craft entries.

Out of 282 pieces submitted for consideration, the jurors chose 59 pieces by 39 individuals for display. Merit awards to two persons showing in each category of the show consist of $25 merchandise prizes and awards of $15 cash and an art book.

Janet E. Turner Show to Open At Bergstrom

NEENAH — An exhibition of graphics by Janet E. Turner, associate professor of art at Chico State College, California, is scheduled to open Wednesday at the Bergstrom Art Center, 165 N. Park Ave.

The show, which will extend through Dec. 10, consists of 41 original woodcuts, lithographs, etchings and serigraphs, with a combination of media used at times in the same print. Many of the prints are in color; the artist's interest in nature study is responsible for much of their content.

Miss Turner's work is in the permanent collections of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the Philadelphia Museum of Art, Yale University, the Brooklyn Art Museum and the Victoria and Albert Museum, London.

She is the winner of numerous prizes, as well as a Guggenheim Foundation Fellowship. She recently presented a series of lectures in Japan on American graphics. Her exhibit at the Bergstrom Art Center was arranged through the Old Bergen Art Guild, Bayonne, N.J.

"Beginning of Night", by Janet E. Turner, is one of 41 original graphics scheduled to go on display at the Bergstrom Art Center, Neenah, Wednesday. The show will continue through Dec. 10. Miss Turner is associate professor of art at Chico State College, in California.

Dominick Labino Weight Purchased by Bergstrom

NEENAH — A large, green glass paperweight with enclosed bubble design is the most recent addition to the permanent collection of the Bergstrom Art Center, 165 N. Park Ave.

The paperweight, purchased with funds provided by Friends of Bergstrom, is the work of Dominick Labino, of Grand Rapids, Ohio. It was selected from a display of free-form paperweights, currently on view at the Art Center.

Both the Labino exhibit, in the Wisconsin Gallery, and the photographic show, "Craftsmen of the City," in the Main Gallery, will conclude at 5 p.m. today. A new show (see story elsewhere on this page) will be opened to the public Wednesday.

All of Labino's paperweights are made free-hand, according to Mrs. E. Campbell Cloak, curator of paperweights. The enclosure is formed at the time the weight is produced; all of the glass is molten at all times, Mrs. Cloak added.

Labino, a craftsman with 30 years of industrial experience in glass as vice president for research at the Johns-Manville Fiber Glass Co., has helped the city of Toledo to become world center for hand-blown fine art glass.

Began Five Years Ago

This achievement is the result of a collaboration that began five years ago between Labino and the Toledo Museum of Art. At that time — in 1962 — the museum set up a workshop to explore the possibilities for individual craftsmen to work with molten glass as a creative medium.

Labino was one of a dozen participants in that workshop. His first contribution to the success of the project was to overcome two main technical obstacles: He developed a formula for glass that could be melted at lower temperatures than those used in commercial manufacture, and that could be kept in the molten state for weeks without crystallization, and he built simple and inexpensive equipment that would not burn a building down.

By sharing his discoveries, Labino enabled other craftsmen for the first time to set up a home studio, and thus expand the art. Last year, when the museum sponsored the first national competition in hand-wrought glass, a professional jury selected 50 pieces from 43 of the 48 entrants.

Labino, who won the $500 first award at the Toledo Glass National, holds 51 patents for glass compositions, furnace designs and glass processes. His work is represented in the Toledo Museum of Art, Columbus Gallery of Fine Arts, Museum of Contemporary Crafts, New York, Adrian College, Mich., and in many other public and private collections.

Mrs. Winfree's Loan Carvings, Textiles From Africa Shown

An exhibition of African carvings and textiles gathered by Mrs. James Winfree during the course of a recent trip is on display in the Samuel Appleton-Carnegie Library at Lawrence University.

Mrs. Winfree, the former Barbara Simon of Kaukauna, is on the library staff while she waits to join her husband in Warri, Nigeria. Because of civil war in the country, dependents of American personnel working in Nigeria have been evacuated. Winfree is an administrative assistant in a fabrication yard operated by J. Ray McDermott Overseas, Inc., an American firm that supplies oil companies.

The textiles on display include an indigo tie-dye cloth typical of that worn by the Yoruba tribe of Nigeria as a draped garment. It was made by an English woman married to a Nigerian doctor, and is similar to native work except for the fact that a more permanent type of dye was used.

Another textile is made up of hand-woven strips sewed together, woven in blue-black, silvery blue and wine. A third piece is machine-made cotton cloth of gay orange and bright green, printed with a Swahili motto. The cotton was purchased in a bazaar in Zanzibar, and was manufactured for the East African market in India.

Most of the carvings are fashioned in thornwood by Rufus Kola of Ibadan, Nigeria. Thornwood has three natural colors — dark brown, light tan and rosy pink. Four of the carvings are women engaged in domestic pursuits — one carrying a basket of yams on her head, one pounding corn, one feeding chickens, and one weaving.

Male figures are a potter, a glass-blower, and a drummer beating on a talking drum.

Another carving comes from the Makonde tribe, the only group in Tanzania to have a tradition of carving. The piece depicts a woman bending over a cooking pot, with a child fastened to her back. The woman is represented with tribal scarring on her face, while the child's face is unscarred. Still another figure shows a man clubbing a lion.

Mrs. Winfree toured Africa for about six months with a friend who had completed her service with the Peace Corps in Tanzania. They travelled in that country, in Zanzibar, Kenya, Ethiopia, Sudan, Dahomey, Togo, Ghana and Senegal, with the longest time spent in Nigeria. Except when flying major distances between countries, they used local transportation and had the experience of going overland from Nigeria to Ghana by station wagon taxi, a mode of transportation used in that area instead of scheduled bus service.

Fifth in Series at New York

Guggenheim Show Devoted To Sculpture for First Time

BY MILES A. SMITH
NEW YORK (AP) — The "Guggenheim International Exhibition 1967," the fifth in the Guggenheim Museum's International series, is devoted entirely to sculpture for the first time.

"Sculpture from 20 Nations," (the subtitle) reviews sculpture since 1960, exhibiting more than 100 works by 77 artists. It will be on display through Feb. 4.

The museum, in reaching its own definition of sculpture, had had to modify its previous rules for the International, as well as make adjustments and compromises to live up to the show's title.

The idea of selecting a certain number of artists from each country has been dropped.

Hence, the show contains works of 22 Americans, Edward F. Fry, associate curator, notes that most of the "radically innovative" sculpture today originates in America, primarily in New York and Los Angeles. Other advance centers are Japan (the show contains works by seven young Japanese artists), London, Dusseldorf, Milan and Paris.

It also has deemphasized the competitive note. Instead of giving prizes, the museum will make an unspecified number of purchase awards before the show ends.

Arranged in Groups The show is arranged in groups, beginning with a half dozen individuals of the old guard who have died recently, but were still producing works of art after 1960 — such names as Arp and Giacometti. Then there are more than a dozen living artists who were born before 1910 — Picasso among them — followed by nearly 30 born between 1910 and 1925. And finally, more than two dozen artists of the young generation.

The balance, then, is toward the advance guard. Innovations — or in many cases, mere novelties — are played up. Minimal Art gets the emphasis.

Both Thomas M. Messer, director of the museum, who wrote the catalog's preface and Fry, who wrote the introduction, state that "post-sculptural developments" have been omitted. Fry specifically refers to the fact that art objects primarily utilizing light and movement (kinetic art) have been left out.

In short, the Guggenheim has recognized that "sculpture" has wandered off the borderland into something else. But its definition doesn't rule out such artists as the venerable, but still young, Alexander Calder. Calder has come up with something called a "motorized standing mobile." It is a steel structure nearly 10 feet tall, constructed industrially from the artist's plans, and titled "spiral."

It has been 16 years since Lawrence University has had an undefeated football team, and although Monmouth College gave the Vikings some anxious moments in the fourth quarter Saturday at the Lawrence Bowl, the Vikes came through with a 18-14 triumph.

Lawrence closed the 1967 campaign with a perfect (8-0) mark, and became the first unbeaten Viking team since 1951. The Vikings also became the first Lawrence team ever to win eight games in a single season as the 1951 team and 0 others prior to that played only seven games.

The Midwest Conference championship, of which the Vikes had assured themselves a week ago, was the second straight for a Lawrence team coached by Ron Roberts. In three seasons at the helm, Roberts has a 20-4 record at Lawrence.

McKee Stars
As was the case through most of the 1967 season, quarterback Chuck McKee, a prime Viking candidate for Little All-American honors, played a standout role. It was McKee who led the Vikes to a pair of first-half touchdowns and then gave Lawrence a 18-0 lead by scoring in the early minutes of the third period.

In all, McKee scored two touchdowns and passed for the other. The senior ace figured in 235 total yards as he rushed for 78 and hit 12 of 18 passes for 157 yards.

It was not all the offensive show of McKee that carried the Vikes to victory, however. When it came down to the final drive and Monmouth had fought its way back into the game, it was the Lawrence defense which preserved the victory.

A pair of defensive gems by Bill Baird and Dennis Kirchoff were keys to thwarting the Scots' late drive which could have carried Monmouth to a win.

Charged Through
Baird's effort came with 4:43 left in the game. Quarterback Ken Farrar of the Scots had just completed a pass to Charley Corie which moved the ball to the Monmouth 40 and a second straight first down. On the next play, Farrar dropped back again to pass, but Baird came charging through and dropped the Scot signal-caller back on the 25 for a 15-yard loss. This apparently rattled Farrar a bit, and his next aerial was picked off by Kirchoff near midfield.

The Vikes took over and appeared to have control, but the Scots dug in forcing McKee to punt, and he responded by booting the ball out of bounds on the 15 of Monmouth for a key 43-yard punt.

Monmouth charged back with Farrar completing one pass for 30 yards, but on his next completion there was an ineligible receiver downfield and a 15-yard penalty took the heart out of the Scots. Finally, a fourth down pass went incomplete and the Vikes took over. McKee carried on two running plays and time clicked out and the Vikes had a perfect season tucked away.

Score in 13 Plays
The game started out as though the Vikes would make an easy day of it. Lawrence drove from its own 24 after the opening kickoff and scored in 13 plays with McKee carrying over from the one on a sneak. Dick

LAFAYETTE, Ind. (AP) — Purdue buried Minnesota's Gophers 41-12 Saturday in rain and mud and its fabulous Leroy Keyes broke a 24-year-old Big Ten one-season scoring record with his 12th, 13th, and 14th conference touchdowns of the year. Purdue came from behind twice in the first half before blocking Minnesota's first Big Ten loss of the year. It left Purdue, ineligible for the Rose Bowl as the 1967 entrant, tied with Indiana, a 14-13 winner at Michigan State, at the top of the conference standings. Both stand 5-0 in the conference.

Minnesota's Bob Stein kicked a 31-yard field goal in the first quarter to open the scoring. Keyes got his first touchdown on a two-yard run but Hubert Bryant of the Gophers broke loose for a 57-yard scamper down the sidelines and Minnesota led 10-7 at the end of the first period.

Sews it Up
Purdue sewed up the game in the second quarter. Keyes knifing three yards for one touchdown and Mike Phipps hitting Jim Beirne with a 27-yard scoring pass for another.

The Boilermakers punched over another touchdown in the third period, a plunge by Perry Williams, and two in the final quarter—an eight-yard run by Keyes and one by the reserves. Minnesota's only scoring in the second half came on a safety.

Keyes' three TDs gave him a total of 18 over-all. He was the nation's leading scorer coming into the game.

Bucks Rally for 17-15 Victory OSU Edges Badgers

By HAL PARIS

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Quarterback Bill Long scrambled for two touchdowns Saturday, leading Ohio State to a 17-15 Big Ten football victory over stubborn Wisconsin before 65,470 rain soaked fans.

The crowd was the smallest since 1950 when an estimated 50,000 watched Michigan defeat the Bucks 9-3 in a blizzard. Long, who got his first score on a 14-yard run in the second quarter, scampered four yards for the winning touchdown early in the fourth period.

It was the Buckeyes' first home victory of the season, boosted their record to 4-3 over-all and 3-2 in the conference.

Seventh Setback
Winless Wisconsin, which has not tasted victory in Columbus since 1918 and has never won in Ohio Stadium, took its seventh setback against a single tie.

The Badgers appeared headed for the victory when they scored nine points in the third quarter to take a short lived 15-10 lead. But opening the final period, Long guided the Bucks 87 yards in seven plays, highlighted by a 60-yard bomb to split end Billy Anders.

Long, who completed only seven of 21 passes for 139 yards, hit Anders, who had gotten behind the Wisconsin safety. But Badger Gary Reineck caught the Buckeye end from behind on Wisconsin's 25-yard line.

Moments later, a pass interference penalty gave the Bucks a first down on the Wisconsin four, and Long took it around left end on a keeper for the winning touchdown.

The penalty was critical. The Badgers appeared to have Ohio State stopped at its own eight, facing a fourth down and five when the flag was dropped.

Long was under heavy pressure as he threw the ball and it fell far short of Anders, the intended receiver.

On the next play, Long rammed wide for the score. The Badgers were to get two more cracks at winning the game. A 21-yard pass from John Boyajian to Tom McCauley gave Wisconsin a first down near mid-field but Boyajian was buried by the Buckeyes' pass rush and the Badgers had to surrender the ball.

Recovers Fumble
With only 42 seconds left, Tom Domres recovered a Long fumble on the Wisconsin 42. The Badgers were able to advance the ball only six yards in the race with the clock and finally handed over the ball.

Boyajian, making his first start for Wisconsin since the opening game, guided the Badgers 66 yards in 10 plays for a first period touchdown and a 6-3 lead. Mel Reddick got the score with a leaping catch of a Boyajian pass from the four.

A penalty helped Ohio State to its three points supplied by a 19-yard Gary Cairns field goal. Four seconds before halftime, Long scrambled 14 yards for a first period touchdown and a 6-3 lead. Mel Reddick got the score with a leaping catch of a Boyajian pass from the four.

Tom Schinke's 42-yard field goal took the Badgers to within a point in the third period. Then, with 2:43 left in the quarter, Boyajian and halfback Dick Schumitsch combined on a 51-yard pass play and Wisconsin was ahead 15-10.

Schumitsch made the play with his open field running after taking the flare pass at the Ohio State 40. He executed two cutbacks, the last after a perfect block by Gale Bucciarelli, and rammed into the end zone.

It was the eighth straight victory for the Buckeyes over Wisconsin but the Badgers were by no means a pushover.

Boyajian, a senior from Hammond, Ind., completed 19 of 36 passes for 252 yards. He hit Reddick four times in Wisconsin's first touchdown drive and gained 74 yards on three completions in the Badgers' last touchdown.

Sophomore Dave Brungard, Ohio's leading ground gainer, topped the rushers with 90 yards in 17 carries while fullback Paul Huff contributed 60 yards in 20 tries.

Haggard's 30-Yard Field Goal
Gives Beavers Another Upset

CORVALLIS, Ore. (AP) — Mike Haggard's 30-yard field goal in the second quarter gave Oregon State a 3-0 upset victory over top-ranked Southern California Saturday, despite O. J. Simpson's 183 yards gained rushing.

The Beavers, who earlier in the season upset second-ranked Purdue, and last week tied UCLA, No. 2 at the time, got the game's only points with 5:05 left in the first half when Haggard made his first of three field goal attempts.

With 18 seconds left in the half, Haggard missed on a 28-yard field goal attempt and failed again in the fourth quarter on a 45-yard attempt.

Splash of Mud
Then the OSU attack was three yards and a splash of mud until the Beavers got within field goal range.

Simpson threatened to run away with the game in the first half, racking up 131 yards on 18 carries. His longest run was 38 yards in the second quarter.

Oregon State's 230-pound fullback, Bill Enyard, gained over 100 yards—including 47 on a run ended by his fumble on the USC 19.

Southern California got across the midfield stripe—to the Oregon State 49—only once in the second half.

The Trojans, now 8-1, meet UCLA this week. Oregon State, now 6-2-1, ends the season this week against Oregon.

Capture WSUC Crown Warhawks Defeat Titans

WHITEWATER (AP) — Neil Hansen kicked a 37-yard field goal in the final period to carry Whitewater from behind to a 23-14 victory over fumble-prone Oshkosh in a season-ending battle for the Wisconsin State University Conference football championship.

It was the second straight title for Whitewater and the second successive year the Warhawks won it with a Hansen field goal against Oshkosh.

Pounces on Fumble
The Warhawks, trailing 14-13 with about 10 minutes left, collected the winning score after Andy Kolstad pounced on a Jim Goeckerman fumble on the Titans' 28.

It was the third Oshkosh fumble of the game and the second that led to Whitewater scores. Myles Strasser, the main Oshkosh running threat, fumbled in the first period and Jerry Bradfield recovered on the Oshkosh 16. Four plays later Leif Fredrickson boomed over from the four.

The Hawks added another touchdown a few minutes later when Dick Pope ran back a punt 39 yards to the Oshkosh 17. Fredrickson again scored, this time from the one.

The Titans narrowed the margin to 13-7 in the second period on a 19-yard pass from Goeckerman to Dwight Anderson. They went ahead in the third period when Brian Burbey scored from the one to cap a 63-yard march.

After Hansen's fourth quarter kick restored Whitewater's lead, the Warhawks' defense took over. It stopped Oshkosh on a fourth down play at the Titans' own three with 35 seconds left. Gregg Jones scored from there. Strasser was held to only 42 yards on 14 carries. Fredrickson gained 67 yards for Whitewater to take game rushing honors. The win gave Whitewater a 7-1 conference mark and left Oshkosh with a 6-2 log.

Oshkosh's second-quarter rally began with a 10-play scoring drive, featuring four completions by Goeckerman. The payoff pitch went to Anderson, and Cranberg kicked the extra point. Whitewater's Hansen threw a 52-yard pass to Barry Wojtak on the Oshkosh 15. However, two incomplete passes and an unsuccessful field goal attempt occurred as the time ran out, leaving the half-time score at Whitewater 13 — Oshkosh 7.

Whitewater kicked off to Oshkosh, and Fred Schippe returned the ball to the Titan 36. Eighteen plays later, including four first downs and a 15-yard penalty, Burbey broke through from the one to score. Cranberg kicked the extra point to put Oshkosh ahead.

After Hansen's field goal, Oshkosh started a move of its own. But after a first down, the Warhawks held and forced WSU to give up the ball. Whitewater then moved in nine plays to the Titan two where Fredrickson fumbled. The Titans received, with 1:53 left in the game, but three incomplete passes and a running play failed to produce a first down. Jones then ran for the insurance TD.

Strasser, conference rushing leader raised his total to 909. MORE 5 1/2 pt.

Palmer Shoots 71, Leads 'Cup' Tourney by 3

Nicklaus Fires 69,
Giving U. S. Team
9-Stroke Margin

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Arnold Palmer carved a one-under par 71 Saturday and continued his drive toward the individual title in the 15th World Cup Golf Tournament with a 54-hole total of 209.

Palmer's seven-under score for three trips around the Club de Golf Mexico course left him three strokes ahead of the international field.

Palmer has never won the individual title although he has played on five World Cup championship teams.

Jack Nicklaus shot a sparkling 69 on the narrow, tree-lined, 7,250-yard course and increased the American team lead to nine strokes over Argentina, 221-130.

Nicklaus is tied in the standings with Fidel de Luca of Argentina, each at 212. De Luca, a last-minute substitute for the ailing Roberto de Vicenzo, shot a third round 68, best of the day.

David Jimenez of Puerto Rico, a neophyte professional who was momentarily tied with Palmer while playing the back nine, caved in to the pressure with a double bogey on 14 and 15 but still carded a 70 that put him in a third place tie at 213 with Bob Charles of New Zealand.

DeLuca putted magnificently, hitting the cup from 45.35 and 20 feet while carding six birdies and two bogies for his 34-34—68 that matched the opening day rounds of Palmer and Argentine teammate Florentino Molina.

Palmer, who got sand in his eye blasting out of a trap Friday, was apparently still bothered by an eye irritation and often rubbed the left eye as he toured the beautiful course.

He missed three easy birdie putts on the front nine, leaving the ball short each time.

Vikes Ecstatic 'A Matter of Pride,' Says Taggart of Win

BY STEVE WILSON

"It was a matter of pride." That capsulized comment by senior defensive back "Chip" Taggart summarized the feeling of an ebullient Lawrence University football team after the afternoon of the year. Mon-Vikes finished their most successful football season in his- Dan Dawson, readily attested to Lawrence's grid talent.

Monmouth College had just become victim No. 8 in the "They hit hard and were nervous in the first quarter and really up for the game," said that may have accounted for the defensive end Dale Schuppura. First touchdown. But they're the "but we had to have this one and best."

Sharp Contrast

The ecstatic Viking locker room stood in sharp contrast to the scene after Lawrence's last defeat — to Ripon — in 1966. After that one, Quarterback Chuck McKee prophetically said in a subdued tone to Koskelin. "That's it. We're not losing any more." The Vikes' happiness manifested itself in expected free trips to the shower for the entire coaching staff and athletic director Bernie Heselson.

Head coach Ron Roberts, who brought his Lawrence record to 20-4 in three seasons, said, "It will be a very good winter."

Co-Captain Gary Hietpas, who has been the defensive spark-plug of the Vikes for three years, thought the defense played poorly, but added, "It will be great to relax now. We've achieved our goal."

Junior defensive tackle Denny DeCock had praise for the Monmouth offense. "They're the first team all season to adjust correctly to our defense. But we were still tough enough to stop their ground game."

Voice Determination

"We didn't leave the field with any regrets," said John Biolo, the stellar free safety who pulled down 11 enemy passes during the season.

Division Leaders Duel in Milwaukee Browns Test 'New' Bay Backfield

By KEN HARTNETT

MILWAUKEE (AP) — The Cleveland Browns kick at the crutches supporting the crippled Green Bay Packers today in a nationally-televised National Football League game between division leaders.

The Packers, 5-2-1, take a two-game lead in the Central Division of the Western Conference into the contest with the Browns, who are tied with St. Louis for the lead in the Eastern Conference's Century Division race. Cleveland has a 5-3 record.

Green Bay will be without the services of its two starting running backs. Both Elijah Pitts and Jim Grabowski suffered leg injuries in last Sunday's 13-10 loss to the Baltimore Colts.

Pitts, who tore an achilles tendon, is lost indefinitely. Grabowski could return in time for the Nov. 19 meeting with the San Francisco 49ers in Green Bay.

Below Par

Defensive end Lionel Aldridge has been bothered by an ankle injury and cornerback Herb Adderley has been below par with arm miseries. Both are likely to start.

Adderley, one of the most feared defenders in professional football, has been the victim of five touchdown passes in the past three games.

Gary Collins of Cleveland, down, who did it twice, was the only receiver to catch a touchdown league in stinginess. They have pass over Adderley all last sea-

Cleveland quarterback Frank Ryan, who also is battling injuries, is likely to test Adderley early with Collins while trying to establish a running game with backs Leroy Kelly and Ernie Green. Kelly is the league's top rusher. Green is ninth.

The Packers, who plan to use Donny Anderson and Ben Wilkerson with quarterback Bart Starr in the starting backfield, must rely on their crack defense in the event of an offensive break.

Green Bay defenders lead the league in stinginess. They have yielded the fewest points, the fewest yards passing, the fewest completed passes, and the fewest yardage on kick-off returns.

But the Packers have not been conspicuously successful in stopping the rush. Kelly and Green have rushed for a total of 1,094 yards in eight games.

The Browns will be seeking their first victory over the Packers in five meetings, including the 1965 championship game.

Kickoff is scheduled for 3 p.m. CST.

Northwestern Humbles Trotters Win Non-Leaguer In Overtime Iowa, 39-24, With Last Quarter Scoring Streak

By JOE MOOSHIL

EVANSTON, Ill. (AP) — Northwestern's gambling Wildcats, led by halfback Chico Kurzawski, scored four second-quarter touchdowns in a span of fewer than seven minutes, and humbled Iowa 39-24 Saturday in a Big Ten football game.

Iowa opened the scoring with a one-yard touchdown play by Silas McKinnie to take a 7-0 lead.

Northwestern scored on a safe- and a field goal before marching 76 yards to take a 12-7 lead on Kurzawski's short smash.

Inside Kick

This gave Northwestern the opportunity to employ the on-side kick which the Wildcats used to perfection.

The Wildcats recovered two of Tom Garretson's on-side kick. They were in possession again in the fourth quarter when Ed. White and the other by Dennis Coyne and turned them into 4-35 5 3 31.7 touchdowns Bill McAllen scored eight straight points for the Trotters in overtime.

Dan Zuleger paced the win: plays. Northwestern went into with 26 points, and McAllen punted. Kurzawski, 18, to Dennis Boothe to the Iowa 6 and quarterback Bill Melzer scooted across the next play, Despite trailing 32-10, Iowa never quit fighting.

Bruins Smell Roses UCLA Whips Washington

LOS ANGELES (AP) — All-America candidate Gary Beban of UCLA fired three touchdown bombs and scored once himself as the Bruins, roaring on toward the Rose Bowl, handed Washington a 48-7 thrashing Saturday. It was the worst Washington defeat since 1957.

Rebounding with revenge from its 16-16 tie with Oregon State a week ago, UCLA remained undefeated in eight games and retained a 4-0-1 record in the Pacific-8 Conference.

The Bruins hit the scoreboard for six touchdowns in the first half and a 41-0 lead at halftime. The final score was the worst in the history of Washington Coach Jim Owens. His previous worst afternoon was when Minnesota defeated the Huskies 46-7 in 1957.

Coach Tommy Prothro began sending in UCLA's reserves in the second quarter and kept them in through the second half. In an apparent effort to hold the score down, fullback Rick Purdy played quarterback in the last period.

NOTES and NOTIONS

This is the first year in the history of the Fox Cities area hasn't had the No. 1-rated high school football team in the state (Oshkosh was tops in 1965 and Neenah in 1966). In fact, the Patriot high point was a victory, area failed to place any team in at Sheboygan, over South, which the AP's final Big 10 ratings boasted some of the best person-but, that doesn't mean that the over-all calibre of football was appreciably down, for at least six teams had outstanding records. They are Little Chute St. John (8-1), Fond du Lac (7-1), Neenah (6-1-1), Menasha St. Mary (7-2), Kimberly (6-2) and Appleton Xavier (5-2-1). There actually were closer-than-usual races in most conferences, and top-notch coaching achievements abounded.

Conference champions St. John and Neenah would have been a match for almost any team in the state despite missing the ratings. Both teams were directed by second-year head coaches. The Chuteles, under Avitus Ripp, got off to a comparatively slow start in non-conference play as well as in the Fox Valley Catholic circuit. But, they gained momentum as the season progressed and had the poise, desire and ability to win the "must" games down the stretch—against Xavier, St. Mary and Premontre. This had to be one of the top teams in the history of Little Chute — always a football hotbed.

The Ben Meixl-coached Rockets, after suffering heavy losses from the top-rated team of '66, also got off to a shaky start (losing to Preble) but snapped back to finish the school's Mid-year man; Chuck Mercein is Eastern Conference career in only in his third pro year; and high style, Meixl remained at 1,000 in the "title league" (with active NFL season. In addition, 2-for-2) as Harland Carl had Jim Grabowski is a second-year done before him (at 4-for-4). The injury to clutch Neenah's record of six straight playing Elijah Pitts (now on the equals the Xavier title streak disabled list) and Grabowski will (which ended this year) for tops again test the Packers' vaunted in sustained grid proficiency. bench strength. For most of the The Rockets' hopes for a seventh straight league title will be, have come through exceptionally on the line in the Fox River Valley next season.

Now Coach L. G. Friedrichs produced a notable grid revival at St. Mary. A knowledgeable coach of many football wars, Friedrichs molded an exciting team — the area's highest scoring machine — that was in the title running until the second last weekend. A narrow loss to St. John was all that dropped the Zephyrs out of contention. Kimberly not only posted a 7-50 record but had the distinction of dealing St. John its only defeat. The Papermakers, under Coach Jack Wippich, remained a hard-bitten crew that was extremely difficult to score against even though the team was relatively small.

The first title-less season in Xavier's FVCC membership, failed to dim Gene (Torchy) Clark's coaching reputation. Clark, who has the area's glossiest career record (55-7-1), had his team in the thick of every game (in the losses to St. John and St. Mary, the decisions were in doubt until the final seconds) and sprang a major surprise in stopping previously unbeaten Premontre at Green Bay. Xavier lacked depth, especially in the backfield, and was forced to go without Brad Graff — the team's leading offensive weapon — in the last three games.

Claude Radtke, who compiled quite a coaching record in Fort Atkinson, made an impressive head-coaching debut in this area. His 4-4 record at new Appleton East ranks with the best '67 performances anywhere around. His four lettermen, while a big total by Appleton West standards (the Terrors had one) left him far short of the manpower available to any of the Fox River Valley Conference's other nine mentors. The Patriots finished fifth in an 11-238-yard record for a Darrell team circuit and were "out of the year

Wyoming Grid Team Blasts New Mexico

Cowboys Set 2 Records En Route To 42-6 Triumph

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Seventh-ranked Wyoming won its second straight Western Athletic Conference football title Saturday with a 42-6 stampede over New Mexico, with two of the Cowboys setting NCAA records.

Kicking specialist Jerry DePoyster booted four field goals from 33, 23, 40 and 19 yards and four extra points for a three-season total of 175 points. The old three-year scoring record for a kicker was 170 by Princeton's Charley Gogolak in 1963-65.

Vic Washington returned four punts for a season total 52 run-backs that bettered the record of 50 by Texas A&M's Marion Flanagan in 1943.

Besides the record breaking performances a highlight of the regionally televised game for unbeaten Wyoming was the quarterbacking of 177-pound, spindly-legged Paul Toscano, who passed for touchdowns of 11 yards to Hub Lindsey and 21 yards to tailback Jim Kuick. Toscano also scored on a 55-yard run.

Beloit Posts 20-7 Victory Over Cornell

BELOIT (AP) — Beloit posted a 20-7 college football victory over Cornell of Iowa Saturday, as both teams closed their Midwest Conference seasons with 4-4 records.

Tom Phillips passed for two touchdowns to spark the Beloit victory. George Wenzel scored the other TD by recovering a blocked punt in the end zone.

Phillips' passes went to Dave Davenport for 26 yards and Stann Whipple for six yards. Pete Piazza booted both extra points.

Pat Luther scored Cornell's lone touchdown in the second quarter on a 22-yard pass from Pete Irvine. Terry Berner added the point after.

Powerful Defense Helps Keep Victors' Title Hopes Alive

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP) — Missouri overcame a fumbling start and beat Kansas State 28-6 Saturday with tough defensive play, led by linebacker John Douglas and a dazzling 50-yard touchdown run by Jon Stagers.

The victory kept alive Missouri hopes for a share of the Big Eight football title. The Tigers stand 3-2 in league play and 6-2 for the season. Kansas State is 0-5 in the conference and 1-7 for all games.

With Missouri clinging to a 7-6 lead late in the third period, Douglas intercepted a Bill Nosssek pass and Missouri needed just four plays to move 24 yards for a 14-6 lead.

Quarterback Gary Kombrink passed 10 yards to split end Chuck Webber on the second play. Kombrink got the TD on an eight-yard sweep. Missouri rushed over two more touchdowns in the closing minutes.

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — The fired up Duke Blue Devils, led by quarterback Larry Davis 14-13 and remain among the nation's unbeaten teams.

Isenbarger accounted for 38 yards in the final scoring drive and banged through from the seven with less than three minutes left.

Michigan State, which absorbed its fourth straight setback, staged a two-minute, 10-point blitz early in the third period to surge into a 13-7 lead, which looked good until Isenbarger took charge.

Takes Early Lead MSU, which grabbed an early 3-0 lead on the first field goal, senior Mitch Pruett ever-kicked, saw Indiana surge into the lead 7-3, as the Hoosiers marched 70 yards with the second half kickoff. Quarterback Harry Gonso went over for the final yard on the 70-yard drive.

Michigan State bounced back with a safety and a 32-yard scoring drive that saw Dwight Lee score from the four for MSU's go ahead touchdown.

A two point conversion sent Michigan State out in front 13-7 but then Isenbarger took over.

Indiana staged another last second threat as it drove to the MSU five before the clock ran out.

Wolverines Rally to Beat Illinois, 21-14

Hoey's 60-Yard Punt Return for Touchdown Sparks Comeback

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Brown hit Jim Mandich for George Hoey's 60-yard punt run-eight yards and Garvie Craw back for a touchdown late in the for 11. Berhne finally scored third period rallied Michigan to with Brown's 7-yard pass, a 21-14 Big Ten football victory Frank Titus' conversion kick over Illinois Saturday.

The scoring burst was followed by a two-point conversion. Then came Hoey's punt return on Dennis Brown's pass to Tom Turn touchdown to turn the Weinmann and tied the score game around.

Michigan's Johnson gained 61 yards rushing, more short of the fourth period after Tom Harmon's school season Tom Curtis stole Dean Volkman's record of 884 set in 1933. Johnson's pass and returned 16 yards to the Illinois 45.

The Wolverines scored in nine plays on Ron Johnson's 3-yard smash. Brown's 13-yard toss to Jim Berhne was the drive's big play.

The victory gave Michigan a 2-3 conference mark and a 3-5 season record. Illinois was reduced to 1-4 in the league and 2-6 overall.

Illinois scored twice in the first half after pass interceptions. Bolts Final 16

In the first quarter, Ron Bess fished a Brown aerial and the Illinois thrust 36 yards in six plays. Rich Johnson booted the final 16 and Dan McKissic added the first of his two extra points.

Terry Miller stole another Brown pitch in the second quarter on the Michigan 29. After an offside penalty, the Illinois scored in six plays on Johnson's run from the 7-yard line. Volkman's 15-yard toss to Craig Timko evened the drive.

Michigan's first touchdown in the third quarter came minutes after the Wolverines were stopped on the Illinois 3, following Gerald Harman's recovery of Rich Johnson's fumble on the Illinois 8.

The Wolverines then took the ball on the Illinois 36 after a punt and marched across in seven plays.

Colts Clash With Falcons

By MURRAY ROSE
Associated Press Sports Writer

The pressure will be on running backs Donny Anderson and Ben Wilson of the Green Bay Packers and quarterback Frank Ryan of the Cleveland Browns in the clash of two of the National Football League's divisional leaders at Milwaukee today.

Anderson and Wilson will replace injured Elijah Pitts and Jim Grabowski for the Central Division pacesetters. Anderson performed ably when called on in the first quarter of the losing 13-10 squeaker with the unbeaten Baltimore Colts last Sunday.

Ryan, hurting on the ribs and ankles previously and bruised on his passing right arm last Sunday in leading the Browns to a 34-14 romp over Pittsburgh, appears set to go. He has a tremendous one-two running punch in Leroy Kelly and Ernie Green and may have an additional receiver on hand in tight end Milt Morin, out since pre-season with a knee injury.

Total Defense
Ryan figures to get a rush from the Packers. No 1 in the NFL in total defense and pass defense. The Packers are favored by a touchdown.

The Browns are in a tight spot in the Century Division, tied at 5-3 with St. Louis and only a game ahead of the New York Giants, 4-4. The Packers are two games in front of Detroit, 3-4-1, and 2½ ahead of the Chicago Bears, 3-5.

The Green Bay-Cleveland contest will be shown on television in most parts of the country as part of a video doubleheader. Starting time is 4 p.m. EST.

In the other games on the full eight-game program, Baltimore is at Atlanta, Dallas at New Orleans, Detroit at Minnesota, Pittsburgh at St. Louis, New York at Chicago, Philadelphia at Los Angeles and San Francisco at Washington.

The American Football League's card has Buffalo at the New York Jets, Houston at Denver, Kansas City at Boston, and Miami at San Diego.

Look for Upsets
While the Packers and Browns engage in their toughest, the NFL's others leaders figure to win comfortably. That's the time, however, to look for upsets.

The Colts, atop the Coastal Division with a 6-0-2 record for a one-game margin over Los Angeles, are favored by two touchdowns over the Falcons 1-6-1, at Atlanta. The Colts just barely edged the Falcons 38-31 in their first meeting after leading 31-7 at the half. Johnny Unitas threw for 401 yards in that Sept. 18 game. Atlanta quarterback Randy Johnson has been playing despite a bruised abdominal muscle.

Dallas, pacing the Capitol Division with 6-2, also is a two-touchdown choice over the New Orleans Saints, 1-7. The Saints, who scored their first victory last week in a 31-24 upset of Philadelphia, gave the Cowboys plenty of trouble on a muddy field at Dallas on Oct. 15.

Playing without quarterback Don Meredith, the Cowboys squeezed out a 14-10 victory. Meredith will play this one, however. He passed Dallas to a 37-7 trouncing of Atlanta last Sunday.

Favored Again
St. Louis, 5-3, beat the Pittsburgh Steelers, 2-6, 28-14 on Jim Bakken's kicking last Sept. 24. They are favored to do it again. Bakken scored 22 points in that game on a record seven field goals in nine attempts and one requested to stop at the high conversion Bill Nelson may get school offices for their tickets.

The call over Kent Nix for the starting quarterback job against explosive Homer Jones. But the Cardinals.

The Los Angeles Rams, 5-1-2, off returns and Savers is the best in that department.

San Francisco, 5-3, beaten in its last two games, and Washington, 2-4-2, winless in its last five, is rated about a tossup at the Skins probably.

The Skins probably will be able to use linebacker Mike Ditka and defensive back Paul Krause.

Chief Weapon
Chicago, 3-5, with Gale Sayers over the rallying Vikings, 2-5-1, its chief offensive weapon, is at Minnesota. The Vikings beat Chicago 27-24 last Sunday for a record of two victories, one tie and one loss.

New York's and one one-point loss in their Fran Tarkenton has tossed 19 last four games. Rookies are passes in the final period to give Indiana's homecoming.

Ameche Stars in UW's Victory Over Indiana

25 Years Ago — Brigham Young University wound up victory over the Green Bay Packers, 10-6, in the first game of the season. Green Bay had a chance to pull the game out in the final seconds, but a 23-yard field goal attempt by Ward Cuff of the Buffaloes scored on long runs, passes and punt returns.

Michigan climbed to the top of the nation grid rankings after thumping Wisconsin, 40-6, before a sellout crowd of more than 45,000 fans in Madison.

15 Years Ago — Alan "The Horse" Ameche rambled for three touchdowns of 43, 31, and 37 yards as Wisconsin spoiled the former All-American forward at St. Bonaventure.

20 Years Ago — "Pitchin' Paul" Christman fired two touchdown passes in the final period to give Indiana's homecoming.

and tied Michigan for the Big 10 lead with the New York Knickerbockers 18 months after he was drafted. Stith had been hospitalized with tuberculosis.

Ted Marchibroda of Detroit set a mark of 390 yards passing in one game — the most ever by a collegian. Marchibroda hit on 27 of 54 passes, but his team lost to Tulsa, 62-21.

10 Years Ago — Charles E. "Cub" Buck, who gained fame as a tackle for both the University of Wisconsin and Green Bay Packers, became the 22nd member of the Wisconsin Athletic Hall of Fame.

A 7-man syndicate from Chicago purchased 90 per cent of the Milwaukee Braves baseball team from owner Lou Perini.

Penn State Deals Third-Rated NCS Its First Setback

Wolfpack Halted 1 Yard From Goal With 40 Seconds Left

UNIVERSITY PARK, Pa. — Penn State scored twice in the first period, then held on in the final minutes to upset previously unbeaten and third-ranked North Carolina State 13-8 in football Saturday.

Dartmouth Tips Stubborn Lions

Columbia Halted 3 Times Inside The 1-Yard Line

NEW YORK (AP) — Dartmouth stopped Columbia three times inside the 1-yard line, then drove for 43 yards behind versatile Gene Ryzewicz for a fourth quarter touchdown and a 13-7 Ivy League football victory over the stubborn Lions Saturday.

Ryzewicz, the Indians' poised little quarterback, kept the winning drive alive with a key fourth down pass to John Wimmer and scrambled six yards for another first down on the Columbia one-yard line before sending Steve Laxford across to snap a 7-7 tie with just over six minutes to play.

The victory, sixth for Dartmouth in seven games this season, kept the Big Green alive in three quarters.

Wisconsin's Gale Bucciarelli fumbles the football on his 29-yard line in the second quarter of Saturday's game at Columbus, O. Teammate Mel Reddick (not shown) recovered for a 10-yard gain. The identifiable Ohio State player is Tom Portsmouth (30). OSU won, 17-15. (AP Wirephoto)

Jays Have Most Lettermen

Twin Citians Launch Play

NEENAH-MENASHA — When Magedanz, Jankowski (6-3) and Menasha High School began last year's basketball practice, not a Jayvee will have good size.

Now as the Twin Cities' three prep squads move into their final week of drills before next weekend's inaugurals, the Bluejays have the most veterans — five Neenah lists three returnees and St. Mary only two.

The Rockets and Bluejays debut at Oshkosh and Fond du Lac, respectively. Friday night while St. Mary opens the next night with Stevens Point Pacelli, the invader.

Barry Ewald and Doug Martin are starting their third seasons as Menasha and Neenah coaches. Bob Pliska, whose last seven Xavier junior varsity teams rolled up a 105-15 record, succeeds Bob Karlsny at St. Mary.

Menasha lettermen and the 1966-67 point totals include Kevin Conway (187), Tim Gressler (136) and Tom Blehm (22), seniors, and Ron Haack (95) and Brad Schliem (17) juniors.

Last year's junior varsity team had an 11-7 record, although, because of injuries, the club seldom was at full strength.

Veterans at Neenah are Dan Jankowski, a 2-year regular, who collected 265 points, Lee Olson (22) and Dan Blank (9). Tom Jackson (22), who earned a letter last year, has moved from Neenah.

Dale Magedanz, 6-7 senior, who scored 27 points, Ned Kramer, John Lagodney and Mark Eastwood are other seniors who saw varsity action a year ago. The junior varsity won 13 of 18 games.

St. Mary's returnees are Mike McClone, who collected 152 points, and Pat Hermus, 41. Mears declined to give his reaction to the game.

"You couldn't get a fair test of the 12-foot basket without a limited varsity experience.

The Zephyrs and Bluejays will lot of practice and our boys had be small while the Rockets with only 30 minutes of shooting 12-foot basket with practice.

LAUREL, Md. (AP) — Fort Marcy staged a thrilling stretch duel with favored Damascus Saturday and won the $150,000 Washington, D.C. International at Laurel Race Track as American representatives ran 1-2 in the nine horse field.

Carrying the dark gray silks of Paul Mellon's Rokeby Stables and with veteran Manuel Ycaza using his whip liberally, Fort Marcy stood off Damascus' desperate stretch bid and scored in the 1 1/2-mile event by the narrowest of margins.

Tobin Bronze from Australia was third and Canada's He's a Smoothie was fourth.

Back of the four leaders in order came Japan's Speed Symboli, Casaque Grise, France's 3-year-old filly, the highly regarded Ribocco, representing England but American owned, Venezuela's Chateaubriand, and In Command, the second British representative.

Wins $90,000
Fort Marcy, generally acclaimed America's top grass course performer, covered the 1 1/2 miles in the comparatively slow time of 2 minutes, 27 seconds, in picking up first place money of $90,000.

The official chart showed his margin of victory a nose over Damascus, ridden by Bill Shoemaker. It was another 2 1/2 lengths back to Tobin Bronze, recently purchased for an estimated $336,000 by William Breliant and Irving M. Litz of California.

With Damascus going off the odds-on choice of 33-1, Fort Marcy paid $18.40, $4.60 and $3.40. Damascus, making his first start on the grass against a field wise in the way of turf racing, returned $2.80 and $2.40.

Tobin Bronze, due to start his American campaign in California early next year, paid $3 to owner of the Orions announced show.

Pitt Outclassed Hanratty, Schoen Pace Irish to 38-0 Victory

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Notre down— a 36-yard touchdown Dame's Terry Hanratty ran for march—with a 16-yard pass to two touchdowns and elusive Jim Winegardner. Three Tom Schoen ripped off a 78-yard plays later. Jeff Zimmerman punt return Saturday, leading darted into the end zone from the Irish to a 38-0 conquest of the one.

Late in the first quarter, Hanratty was given plenty of time by his forward wall on passes, connecting on eight of 13 passes for 120 yards before leaving to rest midway through the third period. But all of Notre Dame's touchdowns came on the ground.

He also set up Notre Dame's second touchdown with a 20-yard return and a field goal with a 13-yard return.

Intercepts Pass
Schoen intercepted a pass and returned it 40 yards just before the half, but time ran out before the Irish could score.

The Notre Dame backs crashed through the porous Pitt defense for a total of 284 yards running.

Pitt could gain only 15 yards on the ground.

Hanratty started the Fighting Irish toward their first touchdown. Hanratty faked a handoff into the center and turned the end untouched for a two-yard score.

Hanratty's second touchdown came after Pitt's George Medich punted off the side of his foot and the ball went out on the Pitt 16. On the first play from scrimmage, the Notre Dame quarterback shrugged off two tacklers and skirted end to score.

Texas Christian Rips Texas Tech

Red Raiders' SWC Title Hopes Are Put in Jeopardy

FORT WORTH, Tex. (AP) — Texas Christian's unpredictable Frogs struck down favored Texas Tech 16-0 Saturday, severely jeopardizing the Red Raiders' Southwest Conference title hopes.

An unruly Christian defense blunted the potent Tech running attack, ranked No. 1 nationally, while quarterbacks P. D. Shabay and Dan Carter directed an inspired offensive.

The loss prevented the Red Raiders from gaining a share of the SWC lead with idle Texas A&M, leaving them 3-2 in the league and 4-4 for the season. The Frogs, meanwhile, were winning their second straight after five consecutive setbacks and the victory brought their conference chart to 2-2.

Shabay pitched a 46-yard scoring pass to end Bill Ferguson to start the Christians rolling, then came back with a 22-yard shot to set up a second touchdown in the final period.

Ross Montgomery, who scored four touchdowns against Baylor last week, knifed in from the one for the second score.

Sandwiched in between was a 25-yard field goal in the third period by sophomore Wayne Merrill.

Taller Players Retain Advantage in 12-Foot Basket Experiment

By ESCAR THOMPSON

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Tennessee's experiment with 12-foot baskets in its intra-squad basketball game left a lot of questions unanswered.

But it apparently settled one thing — accuracy from the floor still wins games.

The White team beat the Orange 43-36 with the Whites hitting 25.7 per cent of their floor shots as against 20 per cent by the Oranges.

Coach Ray Mears agreed to raise the goals from regulation 10 feet to 12 as an experiment only for Sports Illustrated magazine.

The experiment was aimed at ascertaining whether the higher basket would help the tall or the short player.

Mears declined to give his reaction to the game.

"You couldn't get a fair test of the 12-foot basket without a limited varsity experience.

The Zephyrs and Bluejays will lot of practice and our boys had be small while the Rockets with only 30 minutes of shooting 12-foot basket with practice.

Bow Hunters Having Record Season

SINGLE SHOT

"The Redcoats are coming." You don't find Paul Revere tearing through the streets these days when you hear those four words. Neither do you find the women bolting the shutters and hiding little children behind their skirts.

Instead, resort operators rub their hands in glee and saion keepers pack the cooler to the hilt.

What is this madness all about?

It's the approaching Wisconsin deer hunting season and Saturday will find better than 300,000 rifle and shotgun toting hunters invading the woods.

The coming of the Redcoats signifies a shot in the arm for the resort operator who has watched his business slack off continually since Labor Day. This will be the last big push until doors are swung open again next spring and the welcome mat will be rolled out for another season.

Saloon keepers around the state know what the deer season means. At the end of the day there will be toasts to the mighty deerslayers and others will be trying to drown away the anguish of having missed a buck.

And the women — they will probably be donning their miniskirts and heading for Green Bay to see the Packers play at Lambeau Field where it seems they always "conveniently" schedule a home game on the first weekend of the deer season.

Part of our group, which will again be touring the hills and swamps of Marinette County in the Crivitz area, tramped around several old haunts and looked over some new territory last weekend.

Hunters who have been out for partridge claim there are more deer than in the past few years. We managed to count five doe as we poked around, but there was very little activity. The partridge season is closed north of Highway 64 and consequently most hunters in the north have put the shotgun away and are waiting for the deer season.

It was cold last Sunday and the woods still held a light snow cover in the afternoon.

About the only spots that melted were those on the sloping hillside where the sun could generate a little heat.

On the way home we stopped to blow the foam off a couple of jugs of suds. In the process we managed to bag again all the bucks that the group has taken in the last five years and also managed to shave a little more of the margin off those missed shots.

That's one thing about deer hunting — the stories linger on and on. Come Saturday night when the steaks are broiling on the grill, the smell of baked potatoes is drifting about the kitchen and a stiff drink rejuvenates the body, there will be one wild tale after the other.

Each year we cuss out the Crivitz area for its lack of deer and say we're going to find another place. Then, when the time comes for another season the magic of the hunting shack begins to take hold and like a magnet it draws the Old Buck Slayer's Association northward again.

MADISON — Bow hunting continues to be the big success story in the Badger state. Wisconsin Robin Hoods have racked up a total of 4,763 deer which is 1,570 more than at this time last year.

Set Hearings About Water Quality, Use

Long Range Goal Is to Maintain Suitable Conditions

MADISON — Fishermen and water sports fans will have several chances next week to express their views about quality standards and use classifications for Wisconsin inland waters. The Department of Natural Resources has announced.

The department's Division of Resource Development has scheduled five public hearings to gather evidence and opinions on present and desirable uses of lakes and streams throughout the state. Testimony is invited from fishermen, operators of recreational businesses, boaters, water skiers, and all others with an interest in clean water for recreation and other uses.

In announcing the hearings, the department stated its long-range goal of maintaining and restoring all Wisconsin waters to a condition suitable for "all lawful purposes", and to achieve this goal within 10 years.

Primary Importance The department also announced that further hearings would be held at some time in the future to consider further refinements in classifications and standards for waters of primary importance as fishing waters and for fish reproduction.

Hearings next week will be held as follows, all beginning at 10 a.m.:

Nov. 14 — Room 421 South State Capitol, Madison (Region 1)

Nov. 15 — Room 40, State Office Building, 819 N. Sixth St., Milwaukee (Region 2)

Nov. 20 — Courthouse Auditorium, 400 Market St., Wisconsin Rapids (Region 4)

Nov. 21 — Courthouse Board Room, 201 W. Grand Ave., Eau Claire (Region 5)

Persons unable to appear at a hearing may submit their views in writing to the department in Madison, either before the hearings or any time up to Dec. 1. Statements may be sent to: Water Resources Section, Division of Resource Development, Department of Natural Resources, Room 453, State Office Building, 1 W. Wilson St., Madison 53702.

More to Blaze Orange Than Safety

There is a lot more to the blaze orange story than just safety. Being easily visible in the field can also help you be a more effective hunter and a more courteous hunter as well.

There is no longer any question that a hunter who wears daylight fluorescent blaze orange clothing while afield is a safer hunter. Massachusetts deer hunters who are required by law to wear at least 200 square inches of the eye-catching cloth have been compiling an unparalleled safety record since 1962.

But hunters who are wearing blaze orange into the woods and heavy brush are also discovering fringe benefits from the amazing properties of this easy-to-see color.

Bright Color

"Wearing a bright color that contrasts with your surroundings is a hunting courtesy as well as an important safety factor," stated Charles Dickey, director of the National Shooting Sports Foundation, Inc.

"Your hunting companions and other hunters in the area will appreciate being able to spot you easily. When a party is moving in woods or brush, a quick glance to either side will pick up the eye-catching blaze orange color, helping hunters keep properly spaced even in the heaviest cover." He pointed out. "A flash of blaze orange will let other hunters know you are working a particular area, and they will be able to detour away and avoid flushing game. It also simplifies communication with members of your hunting party without whistling or calling out to each other."

Not Limited

Dickey emphasized that the use of blaze orange should not be limited to just deer hunting. He noted that the Uniform Hunter Casualty Reports of the National Rifle Association over a four-year period showed 1,729 rabbit hunters and 957 pheasant hunters were victims of shooting accidents, compared with 1,450 deer hunters. The two major causes of injuries were listed as "victim out of sight of shooter" and "victim covered by shooter swinging on game."

"A blaze orange cap or vest could have prevented a great number of these accidents," Dickey said. "A hunter should always keep tabs on the other members of his party. When everyone is wearing blaze orange, he can size up a shooting situation much more quickly and be sure that no one is in his probable line of fire."

Beaver, Otter Hearings Set For Monday

WOODRUFF — Beaver and otter trappers are urged to attend forthcoming public hearings on trapping regulations for 1968, reminds Bob Wendt, area game supervisor of the Division of Conservation.

The hearings will be held Monday at 8:00 p.m. in Rhinelander at the Oneida County Highway Commission conference room (west of Rhinelander at the junction of Highways 8 and 47), at Spooner in the Area Conservation Headquarters, and at LaCrosse in the State Office Building conference room.

Game managers in northeastern Wisconsin are making autumn aerial beaver surveys at this time in preparation for the public hearings. Evidence of beaver colonies on streams and lakes is plotted from low flying aircraft. This data is then compared with identical sample flights of previous years to determine beaver population trends throughout the region.

While moderate populations of beaver are highly desirable on a forested landscape because of the aquatic habitat they provide for ducks and furbearers, there is a basic conflict of conservation objectives when they set up on housekeeping on trout streams.

Fish managers of the Division of Conservation will also attend the hearings to report on beaver problems on trout waters.

State Patrol Urges Deer Hunters To Drive Cautiously on Way North

Campers can find some truly excellent buys in the surplus good pack? If so, what would you say is a fair price for it? with some totally unsatisfactory equipment.

The mere fact that an item was designed and used by the armed forces is no guarantee that it meets the needs of civilian use — or even that it is well designed. In my time I have eagerly purchased more than one "bargain" which I have been forced to discard after one or two attempts to use it.

Dear Van — I have an opportunity to buy, for what I think is a very modest price, a World War II Army pack — the type with a welded iron frame and a sack with three outside pouches and a zippered pocket in the flap. Do you consider this a fair price for it?

In my opinion, any price is too much for one of these packs. I still own one, which I too bought for a "modest price," and which I still keep on hand just as a reminder of how miserably uncomfortable such an item can be in comparison with a modern, well-designed pack.

It's not too bad with an extremely light load — but why use such a big sack for a small load? Fully packed, it taxes your strength unnecessarily, requiring far too much effort in proportion to the weight you are carrying.

Perhaps the most versatile outfit for backpacking is one of the better backpacks which permits you to keep the load high so you can walk without leaning into the load excessively. I'm enclosing the names and sources for a couple of such frames which I consider satisfactory.

Dear Van — I have noticed that you rarely mention brand names in your column. Any special reason? C. R.

Unless I have had the opportunity to make personal tests of every single competing product in a category, I avoid printing brand names. I do use brand names for products that are unique in their fields. In the individual replies to inquiries I name brands which I know from experience are satisfactory.

For an answer to your camping question, write to Camping with Van, care of this paper, enclosing a stamped, addressed envelope for a personal reply.

Booklet Offers Tips for Cutting Up Deer Properly

Deer hunters who enjoy the tradition of the pioneer provider can carry that tradition all the way with the help of a new booklet published by the Cooperative Extension Service of Oregon State University. The booklet, "Boning Out Your Deer," makes it easy for a successful deer hunter to shepherd his venison right to the oven.

Designated as Extension Bulletin 819, it provides 35 instructional photographs in the step-by-step process of cutting a deer into roasts, chops, steaks and hamburger. Copies are free to out-of-state residents by writing to the extension service at Oregon State University, Corvallis, Oregon.

If your sense of adventure and tradition stops at field dressing your deer, by all means write and get a copy for the wife.

State Universities to Need Quota?

Post-Crescent Madison Bureau
MADISON — Some state universities may need a non-resident quota on transfer students in the future to keep out of state enrollment figures within the 25 per cent upper level imposed by the Wisconsin Coordinating Committee for Higher Education, the state agency has warned.

The conclusion has been reached in a study paper preparing for the state's overseers of higher education, have been struggling in the face of opposition from the two public university systems to limit the number of out of state students who enter Wisconsin's tax supported colleges and universities.

The conclusion was reached in a study of transfers of students into Wisconsin's higher educational institutions, including both in-state students who shift from one Wisconsin college or another and those who return to complete an education here — and out of state students who transfer from institutions in other states into Wisconsin's collegiate systems.

More Out of Staters
The Wisconsin State University system attracts generally more out of state students than does the University of Wisconsin, according to the study.

Last year 23 per cent of UW-Madison campus transfers involved out of state students, as compared with a 26 per cent overall figure for the State University system.

But figures for individual state university campuses — primarily those located close to campus enrolled at a state university last fall, leading to interpretations that academic difficulties may have been a primary cause, in that instance. About one quarter of the transfers to Wisconsin public institutions last fall involved students leaving two year public and private institutions. And that specialized college programs appear to be responsible for a portion of the transfer students to another institution.

Such programs as the UW-Madison campus school of education and college of engineering are a major goal of transfers. Similar situations exist in the state university system, according to the report.

Physical education programs at LaCrosse attracted 48 students last fall, applied arts at Stevens Point 77, and industrial science, 86, and home economics, 53, at Stout.

The CCHS staff also determined that while college enrollments are growing — an increase of 45,000 undergraduates in the past five years — the transfer rate is staying at a seemingly constant seven per cent rate.

Charge Campuses
The study also determined that more students who leave one state university campus are likely to enroll at another state university campus, rather than at the main Madison campus of the UW.

One out of three state university transfers enrolled at another state university; one out of four state university transfers enrolled at Madison.

Major Enterprise
Wild River Protection, Preservation Planned

Post-Crescent Madison Bureau
MADISON — An outline of policy and goals for a wild river protection and preservation system in the state has been formally adopted by the state board on natural resources and is likely to provide the impetus for a major new conservation enterprise in the state during the next decade.

The statement elaborates, in effect, the general approval of the objective that was given by the legislature two years ago.

The purpose is to assure for future public use and enjoyment "selected parts of Wisconsin's diminishing resource of free-flowing and scenically beautiful rivers," the declaration asserts.

The agency intends to integrate its work with the federal wild program in its Wisconsin phases, in the event that federal enabling legislation, with supporting funds, is approved by the U.S. Congress as already proposed in pending bills.

Considerable money derived from the Outdoors Recreation Act program has already been invested in shoreland acquisitions along the upper reaches of the Wolf River, as in Langlade County, and a special act of the legislature has set aside the Pine, Pike and Popple rivers in northeastern Wisconsin for preservation in their natural state.

Additional financing, for the acceleration of the river protection program, may become available if the legislature accepts the proposal for an enlargement of the ORAP effort as recently urged by a citizens advisory committee chosen by Gov. Knowles to examine the dimensions of the state's future outdoors needs.

Other streams designated for shoreland acquisition as a protective measure in the natural resources board statement of the Brule, Flambeau, Namekagon, Potato, St. Croix, White, Enorechments and impoundments would be forbidden, and the public uses would be strictly delineated in so-called "primitive zones" and "scenic and aesthetic management zones."

Utility Expansion for Wrightstown Will be Considered by PSC

Post-Crescent Madison Bureau
MADISON — The second proposed well and pump house of the Wrightstown water utility, to be located on the west side of the Fox River, will be considered by the State Public Service Commission.

No public hearing will be held on the utility's proposal, the state agency has announced.

Planned is a second well and pump house on the west edge of the river to bypass problems resulting from the existing water main crossing of the river.

The new equipment also would serve as an alternate source of supply in case of a breakdown or repair of the existing well, the commission has been told.

Estimated cost of the project is $29,435.

A golden pheasant under any conditions is an eye-ful of color, but when Post-Crescent photographer David Pieper saw this bird recently, he couldn't resist trying out a "fisheye" lens on his camera. The result is a striking view of one of the unique birds being raised at what may be the closest thing yet to a Fox Cities zoo—a game farm in Menasha. Located on County Trunk P, the farm is owned by Harold Watters, who runs a heating, ventilating and fuel oil business on adjoining land, but finds time to raise nearly 100 birds including waterfowl, peafowl, pheasants, quail, turkeys, pigeons—even a parrot.

Infantry Shield Spells Out Valor Of Area Soldiers

By Lillian Mackesy
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

FIFTY years ago, in November 1917, National Guardsmen from Wisconsin in general and the Fox Cities in particular were a part of two U.S. Army divisions about to blaze famous names for themselves in World War I. This outstanding, dual battle record of fighting the "Hun" in France, Belgium and Germany is reflected in the heraldic insignia of today's National Guard unit headquartered in Appleton and Neenah.

Under the command of Lt. Col. John D. Shipley, of Appleton, its official name of recent reorganization is the First Battalion, 127th Infantry (SRF), 32nd Infantry Division, Wisconsin Army National Guard. Its component parts are Headquarters and Headquarters Company of Appleton and Neenah, and three rifle companies — Company A of Marinette and Clintonville, Company B of Manitowoc and Two Rivers, and Company C of Plymouth and Sheboygan.

This is the World War I story behind the colorful insignia of the 127th Infantry of the 32nd Division. It's the story of how a company of machine gunners from Outagamie County helped earn the bright rainbow background in the center of the shield. They were with guardsmen from Oshkosh and Fond du Lac in the 150th Machine Gun Battalion of the celebrated Rainbow Division (42nd).

Why Red Arrow on Top

There's a good reason why the red arrow is superimposed on the rainbow design of the regimental insignia. The old Companies E, F and G of the 1917 Second Wisconsin Infantry were picked for the 26-state 42nd Division, which became known as the Rainbow Division for its shoulder patch. When these boys returned from war, the companies reformed as Wisconsin National Guard units of the 32nd or Red Arrow Division's 127th Infantry.

The bright red arrow and the motto "Les Terribles" are contributions of Wisconsin men in the 32nd Division. Composed of Michigan guardsmen as well, this was the only American division to have all its colors decorated by the French. The story of how the Red Arrow men got their formidable name also is part of the 127th Infantry's history.

The other symbols in the regimental coat of arms also have significance. The crouching badger at the top forms the crest and signifies the Badger State of Wisconsin. The three circles across the top of the shield are called fountains which are heraldic symbols for water, representing Wisconsin's "wild rushing streams."

The three circles have two more meanings. They represent the three Wisconsin units—the old 1st, 2nd and 3rd Wisconsin National Guard Regiments — from which the 127th Infantry (and the 128th as well) were formed when the Red Arrow Division was organized Sept. 24, 1917, at Camp McArthur in Waco, Texas. The trio of wave-filled circles also commemorates Wisconsin National Guard action in the Spanish American War, the Mexican Border War of 1916 and World War I.

French Nom de Guerre

The nickname of "Les Terribles," came to the 32nd Division by way of praise from a French officer. The division already had made a name for itself as the Americans who never retreated, but always pierced every line attacked. This was to be the Division's standing record throughout the war.

It was during the Aisne-Marne offensive, from July 27 to Aug. 6, 1918, that the 32nd got its name for the first time. Working with a corps of the 6th French Army, the Red Arrow men lined up in front of the Frenchmen and started the push attack that never stopped as the troops went through the village of Cierges and beyond. The French commander, Gen. De Mondesir, came to see for himself how the Americans were fighting—this technique seemed unbelievable. Finding an observation point, he personally watched the Americans climb the steep banks of the Ourq River, then methodically clear the enemy from all the strongholds—a farmhouse, the woods and any other building or hiding place. The French officer

Pollution 'Takes the Count'

A vast sludge bank, built with wastes developed in making paper at Bergstrom Paper Co. during the past 15 years, covers what was once a swampy area on the southern end of Little Lake Butte des Morts. When the 32-acre sector is filled in another 15-20 years, the area could be turned into a parkway by the City of Neenah.

By Peter Geniesse

The Neenah canal provides the link to an important ingredient in the papermaking process at Bergstrom Paper Co., Neenah. The water will pass through a huge clarifier and several settling tanks before it is pure enough for production purposes. (Post-Crescent Photo)

NEENAH — Acres of bleak, steel-grey sludge have replaced a swampy area where cattails were supported by knee-deep muck less than two decades ago.

It's been a favorable exchange. The nearby water is a bit cleaner that it might have been; the city has saved money and, perhaps, some day a lush green carpet will cover the tons and tons of clay on the south end of Little Lake Butte des Morts and turn it into a parkway.

And it's all part of a pollution control program for Bergstrom Paper Co. at its downtown plant.

Back in 1952, the firm spent $285,000 to set up its own waste treatment plant to ease the load at the Neenah-Menasha sewage treatment facility.

The state legislature deeded some 32 acres of lake bottom to the city of Neenah, and the city fathers, in turn, provided a dumping grounds for the mill's unwanted byproduct.

Now, perched on one edge of that sludge bank is $1.2 million worth of buildings and equipment to further clean the water the mill borrows from the river—both before and after it is used.

The water management center, as the new complex on three acres of the reclaimed marshland is called, will go into full operation this month.

A mammoth indoor basin will receive the flow of the Neenah canal at a rate of 10 million gallons a day. A special chemical coagulant will drop the particles in the not-so-pure incoming water to the bottom of the clarifier.

This portion of the water management center is as important to the company as the discharge treatment is to the Fox River Valley. The quality of the paper product depends largely on the water source and during summer "dog days", algae would upset the treatment balance, company officials noted.

After a trip through two more tanks, the water is fit for use. Then, following the flow of the Fox River through the veins of the papermaking process, a similar operation filters the water before it rushes back on its north-bound course. And chances are that this same water will be used and reused several times by industries along the hard-working river before it reaches Green Bay.

The clay residue which results from Bergstrom's papermaking process isn't toxic, nor does it rob oxygen from the water as raw pulp does. But it does discolor the river and causes silting problems.

"Living as we do downtown, we find ourselves in a fish bowl requiring us to make extraordinary efforts not to offend our neighbors," H. R. Moore, company president, said.

Bergstrom's main operations have remained just a few blocks from Neenah's business district since the company was founded in 1904, replacing the old Winnebago Paper Mill.

The firm uses cities for its "forests"; scrap paper in huge bails is chewed by machines, then liquified in beaters. Clay, starch and bleach are among the common ingredients used in making the finished product.

At the end of this de-inking process, the mill is left with the problem of disposing of tons of sludge.

In 1935, when the Neenah-Menasha sewage plant was built, the firm routed its wastes to the new facility. But as the company continued to grow and the load on the municipal facility soared near capacity, Bergstrom decided to build its own treatment plant.

This is a wide-angle view of the interior of Bergstrom Paper Company's clarifier for incoming water. The tank, which has a capacity of 10 million gallons per day, will be used to clean water from the Neenah canal to make it fit for the paper-making process. It's considered an important part of the $1.2 million water management cen-

(Munroe Studio Photo)

A vacuum filter, located in the waste treatment plant built by Bergstrom in 1952 to relieve the load on the Neenah-Menasha sewage facility, strips the remaining water from waste material before the sludge is removed to the fill area behind the downtown Neenah mill.

'No Miraculous Cures, Breakthroughs' Expected

When the state turned over some 32 acres of swampland to the city of Neenah in 1952 and Bergstrom began its filling program, few people objected.

The loudest complaint came from the late Joe Mucha, a "water farmer" who harvested oriental delicacies from the still backwaters.

About half of the "garden" is now filled and in another 15 to 20 years, as increased production brings on increased waste material, the clay fill will extend about 900 feet out from the railroad tracks along a 2,400-foot shoreline.

"By then we hope to have developed some use for the "byproduct," one company official noted.

The new waste treatment facility will add to the sludge removal problem as tiny particles, which had previously been swept into the river, will be settled during the three-stage process.

A new polyelectrolyte coagulant chemical, developed recently by scientists engaged by Bergstrom, paved the way for the million-dollar project, which includes a circular clarifier, 120 feet in diameter, located on the edge of the water treatment center.

All paper mill and de-inking plant waste water will be fed into this clarifier, which has a settling capacity of 8,000,000 gallons per day. The recovered solids will then move to the old disposal plant, where the material is squeezed dry in compaction tanks and through the use of a vacuum filter.

The huge clarifier will increase the holding and settling time of present waste water three-fold, allowing for greater efficiency in removal of solids, according to company officials.

Dump trucks will haul the grey sludge onto the fill area, where the material further settles. Engineers claim that in the future the clay banks could be solid enough for construction and one proposal, part of Neenah's 1961 comprehensive plan, calls for an expressway around the south end of the lake across the sludge base.

After the used water goes through the various stages of purification, it is returned to the lake, rushing through pipes which mix the effluent with canal water. The firm spent more than $100,000 to develop this system of aeration.

Bergstrom officials aren't willing to predict how much the new equipment will reduce the firm's pollution contribution to the Fox River. Rather, they prefer to await the results.

"There are no miraculous cures or breakthroughs in our ceaseless efforts to improve our water conditions," the company president stated.

Moore added, "Over the years we have, and will continue to devote large sums of money and effort to the improvement of our water resource. Our efforts have and continue to pay off in results."

The $1.2 million Bergstrom water treatment center is located on a sludge bank, created by clay wastes developed in the papermaking process for the past 15 years.

The new facility clarifies incoming water and settles the waste from used water before it rushes to join the flow of Little Lake Butte des Morts. (Post-Crescent Photo)

Treated water, mixed with the natural flow of the Neenah canal, rushes out pipes near Bergstrom Paper Company's new water management center in Neenah.

The aeration process is the final step in the pollution abatement control program before the water is returned to Little Lake Butte des Morts. (Post-Crescent Photo)

A huge circular basin, capable of handling 8,000,000 gallons per day, cleans the borrowed water used in making paper at Bergstrom Paper Co. The clarifier, 120 feet in diameter, allows waste material to settle for up to three hours before the water is returned to the lake. (Post-Crescent Photo)

Is It Humane To Let Nature Take Its Course?

By Katherine Andrews

Post-Crescent Correspondent

Although a healthy fawn is an appealing sight indeed, the odds against the survival of a fawn born to an undernourished doe are very great. Deer management plans, which include harvesting, help to minimize the danger of overbrowsing and consequent starvation.

DEER rifles are being taken down from gun racks or out of storage closets, and the lady of the house is finding oily rags on the coffee table and boxes of shells on top of the refrigerator.

Red caps, thermo-lined gloves and hunting jackets are stacked on the hall table, to be sent to the cleaner, while the clothes hamper brims over with such seasonal items as long underwear and red handkerchiefs.

The man of the house has a far-away look in his eyes, and doesn't answer when his wife asks him whether the roast is done enough to suit him, or will he go with her to see junior's teacher. He is dreaming of a pair of antlers, to be mounted over the fireplace — antlers impressive enough to be photographed by the local newspapers and written up in an outdoor magazine. But more than that, if he is a real sportsman, he can visualize a 10-point buck stepping into the clearing just ahead of him. Whether or not he comes back with his tag filled, the chances are that he will have had at least one near miss: one exciting chase after an elusive white-tail, and one more tall yarn to add to his collection of hunting stories.

For the majority of Americans, certainly most of the men, whether or not they hunt, this aspect of life in Wisconsin during the fall is taken for granted — a sort of annual phenomenon that adds a dash of color to the sere brown landscape, and brings a measure of relief from the war news and reports of social unrest.

Women, too — about 15 per cent of Wisconsin's gun and bow-and-arrow hunters — are taking to the field. Wisconsin's relatively high percentage of women is nearly double the national average of 8 per cent.

In addition to the small number of lady nimrods who actually take to the field, there are some wives who, while they probably admit that they "couldn't shoot anything", accept the fact that the sport is both legitimate and wholesome, and here to stay — having been with the human race since pre-historic times. Of these women, a considerable number go along to keep camp for husbands and their hunting partners.

On the other hand, there are the preservationists — those who believe wildlife should be left unmolested at all times and in all circumstances. These are the well-meaning people whose rallying motto is: "Don't upset the balance of nature!" or "Let nature take its course!"

Well, let's see, with the eyes of game manager Don Bubnitz, of the Wisconsin Conservation Department, what happens in a deer yard when nature does "take its course":

The sign that might have told the story is gone now, faded with the melted snow of a bitter northern winter. A chickadee may have been first on the scene that icy morning when the fawn was unable to stir from its bed. Perhaps a raven disturbed the small bird as it pecked busily at the glazed eyeballs. Later, a fox might have flushed the raven from its scavenging, only to be routed by a coyote alerted by the big bird's scoldings.

As spring waned, mice and other woodland rodents came to gnaw on hooves and pieces of red-marrowed bone. Days grew warmer and insects of the forest floor swarmed over scattered bits of carcass. The brief summer's green lush visited the deer yard, hiding the few remaining hairs.

The moral of this story is not that nature is cruel. Nature can be unpredictable, even awesome in her severity. But when man refuses to recognize and deal as best he can with these whims of nature as they affect the creatures in his care, then he is less than kind. He could, indeed, be charged with gross neglect of northern Wisconsin's deer herd! And the crux of the problem lies in the condition of the deer's wintering yards.

A deer yard is an area which affords deer some protection from the rigors of winter. It may be a cedar swamp, a hemlock ridge, a jack-pine plantation, or a narrow deep valley with mixed cover; but either through cover or topography, it provides some protection from weather during the winter months. A deer yard may be as small as three acres, or as large as 10,000.

In winter, deer seek the protection of yards with little apparent regard for the adequacy of the food supply. In many northern Wisconsin deer yards, available food is in very short supply.

The white cedar, black spruce-tamarack lowland hardwood swamps of northern Wisconsin are traditionally deer-yarding areas. They have been used by deer as wintering areas since historic times and are in use today. Until the deer population explosion of the mid-30s in the young forest, then recently brought under fire protection, deer yards supplied deer with a nourishing winter diet.

Today, as a result of three decades of overbrowsing and consequent destruction of winter plants, very few yards can properly support a wintering herd. Deer yards comprise only one-tenth of northern Wisconsin's deer range. It follows that there will be hungry deer when most of the herd is concentrated on this small and abused portion of its range for a third of the year.

Our winter deer yards are in tough shape! And the aftermath of a severe winter is startling. . . The still-born fawns, the barren does, the mid-spring death of adult does weakened beyond the point of return; the single births where there should have been twins; the long odds against fawns born to undernourished does . . . and a fawn dying of starvation is, indeed, a pathetic sight.

But most alarming to the game manager is the battered condition of the vegetation which should provide food and cover during future winters. To him one fact is glaringly obvious — deer are literally eating up their wintertime room and board!

Fortunately, it isn't too late to salvage many of our winter deer yards. Files of valuable data from continuous deer research programs and experience with different kinds of deer seasons gives us the facts:

1) Food (browse) and cover plants on thousands of acres of winter range can recover under reduced browsing pressure.

2) A seemingly obvious solution, the feeding of hay and other artificial food supplements, only compounds the problem of concentrating deer on small acreage to abuse natural browse further.

3) Fewer healthy deer overwintering on healthy range will produce more fawns than a larger number of starving and weakened deer on a deteriorating range. And most important, without damage to the range!

The "deer problem," then, brought into sharper focus, is the inability of the winter range adequately to nourish and shelter a wintering herd as large as the summer herd. The obvious solution is to reduce the deer herd from its fall peak to such size as can be healthily supported by the winter range.

Deer management plans designed to harvest deer when and where surpluses occur deserve the support of wildlife and outdoor enthusiasts. It must also be recognized that the wise logging of aspen ("popple") will provide fresh new shoots for deer browse where older trees have grown beyond reach. Together, these twin factors can assure deer for the nature-lover to observe and the sportsman to hunt.

But whether naturalist, hunter, or conservationist, with a scientific approach to wildlife management, most of us probably feel much as Jody Baxter, the pioneer lad, did in "The Yearling", by Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings. Jody had just shot his first buck:

"Jody knelt down to examine the fine frame. A sickness came over him at the sight of the glazed eyes and the bleeding throat. He wondered, as he often did, why game for him was always three different animals. On the chase, it was the quarry; but when it lay dead, he was sickened and sorry and his heart ached over it. Still later, when it was smoked or cooked, it was only meat. It was as though they were different animals, or different boys."

PEUGEOT WINS THE RACE THAT TESTS THE CAR NOT THE DRIVER

There's no getting around it. In this East African Safari Rally, either a car has it, or it doesn't. Most cars don't have it. Peugeot does.

Peugeot has the kind of built-in stamina, raw muscle, and endurance to get through 3000 miles of Africa's most wretched countryside: waist-high mud swamps, narrow game trails, washed-out roads . . . the whole gruelling works.

Forty-six percent of the cars that started this year's Rally didn't make it. Peugeot came through first. Just like last year.

Peugeot is tough. But it's not a tank. Peugeot is a thoroughbred . . . as graceful on the turnpike as it is rugged in the jungle. It takes sharp turns at better than 60 just as smoothly as it pulls out of an African sand pit. The rack and pinion steering and unique Peugeot suspension make any trip effortless. The plush interiors and classic styling are perfectly at home anywhere.

In fact, wherever Peugeot goes, it goes first class. So does the driver.

Imported Tree Sparrow Is Smaller, Daintier Than His Common Cousin

By Clara Hussong

The house sparrow and the starling are not the only European birds introduced into this country during the last century, but they are the two who made it successfully. A number of other species were brought here and planted in various places, but only a few became numerous. Some plantings died out altogether, and others still exist in small numbers in local areas.

In 1870, 30 years after the first house sparrows were introduced and 20 years before starlings were brought here from Europe, some European tree sparrows were brought to St. Louis. In the nearly 100 years since their introduction they have made little population progress, and are believed to be confined to the vicinity of St. Louis, both in Missouri and in western Illinois.

This imported tree sparrow looks much like the common house sparrow, but is smaller and daintier, and has a few marks not found in the latter bird. In both sexes, the entire top of the head, from the forehead to the nape, is a rich chestnut brown, and it has a black throat front. The sides of its neck are grayish, with a black spot on the cheek below the eye.

In the last issue of The Passenger Pigeon, the magazine published by the Wisconsin Society of Ornithology, there is an account of catching one of those birds in a banding trap. Don Beimbom of Oconomowoc, reports that he and his wife had been banding house sparrows and were using a special sparrow trap to catch them.

On March 29, 1966, Mrs. Beimbom looked out of the window at the trap, and noticed a bird which she took to be a house sparrow approaching it. She rapped on the window to scare the bird away, as she was too busy just then to "process" it. This includes getting the bird out of the trap, tagging it with an aluminum band, and writing up the record.

A little later the bird returned and entered the trap, which had sunflower seeds in it. It was just a few minutes before her husband was due to come home, and she left it for him to process. Banders are not supposed to leave birds in traps for any length of time, as they may injure themselves in their attempts to get out.

When Don got home, he picked up the bird and noticed its smaller size and its strange head markings. On consulting bird books, he found it to be the European tree sparrow. He called in several other competent birders, who confirmed his identification. Several persons photographed it while it was handled, and one of the pictures appears in the magazine. The bird was turned over to the Milwaukee County Zoo, but is now at the Milwaukee Museum.

This is the first time this species has been seen in Wisconsin, and because of its close identification, and the many pictures, it will be accepted for inclusion in the next Wisconsin Check List of Birds. It will be described as an "accidental," that is, a species that is even rarer than rare, and has no business being here at all. No doubt it wandered over from Illinois or Missouri.

It is a native of most of Europe, and parts of Asia. Its call note is said to be much like a house sparrow's, and its song, a soft twittering.

Will the Poodle Lead the Blind?

By Dave Duffey

Might the Poodle, darling of the dog shows and the sophisticated set, attain equal status with the German Shepherd as a guide dog for the blind?

A veteran Milwaukee dog trainer, Marv Schmeling, doesn't see why not and he offers some cogent reasons to support this speculation. He has coached four blind youngsters in dog handling and all of them have taken their Poodles through enough tests to qualify them as Companion dogs under the American Kennel Club obedience trial rules.

Not only must a guide dog for the blind have unusual intelligence, but the dog must be virtually unflappable. Those familiar with the Poodle's fun-loving, often clownish outlook on life, which is a factor in the appeal of these intelligent dogs, will lean to skepticism.

But not Schmeling, whose credentials include the post as head trainer of the Greater Milwaukee Poodle Club. "Forget about the miniature and toy Poodles," he said. "We're talking about the standard Poodle. This is a working dog."

Schmeling is right, of course. While classified by the American Kennel Club as a "nonsporting" dog for show purposes, the standard Poodle may well have started out as a hunting dog and has the size and intelligence to perform the tasks asked of a sporting or working breed.

Minimum height for a standard Poodle is 15 inches and the larger ones are comparable in size to the retriever breeds. In all likelihood, the Poodle got its start as a waterfowl and shorebird retriever. The name itself probably derives from the German pudeln, meaning puddle, perhaps even splash. The breed did originate in Germany, not France, where it became known as the Caniche, a derivative of chien canard, freely translated as "duck dog."

In Germany the breed is called Pudel or, in Latin, Canis familiaris aquaticus, which in plain English means "water dog." As a matter of fact, some trainers have had a lot of fun and success in recent years using standard poodles as waterfowl retrievers. Most are good swimmers and their dense coat affords the necessary protection. Untrimmed or cut down without regard for style they strongly resemble Irish Water Spaniels and Curly-coated Retrievers, who may owe their existence to Poodle ancestors.

It's entirely possible that the fancy trims Poodles now exhibit stemmed from the practical practice of shearing away excess hair that would impede progress in the water but leaving clumps to protect joints and organs.

Schmeling points to the Poodle's coat as a factor that might promote it as a guide dog. Many persons are allergic to dog hair. Therefore they can't be in contact with most dogs. However, the "fur" of the Poodle seems to be non-allergic and many blind persons who cannot have a guide dog of one of the other breeds because of this allergy have no difficulty with the Poodle.

Poodles aren't "shedders" and while this lack of a major nuisance to many persons is desirable, Schmeling admits that the considerable grooming it takes to keep a Poodle presentable may prove a stumbling block. But he thinks that can be overcome.

Even the relatively short tail of the Poodle is advantageous, Schmeling feels. There would be less danger of it getting stepped on or caught in doors.

Reflections in a Pheasant's Eye

A golden pheasant is held by owner Harold Watters, Menasha, in this unusual "fisheye" camera view of a bird getting a bird's eye view of a camera.

By Cliff Miller

MENASHA — While citizens periodically suggest a zoo for the Fox Cities, usually mentioning Appleton as the location, a Menasha businessman has gone ahead on his own with the next best thing — a wildlife farm specializing in fowl.

1313 Racine Street Road.

Five species of geese and nine of ducks ply the water of his man-made pond, while 15 kinds of pheasants, four of quail and three of peafowl, several young turkeys and a number of fancy chickens occupy the pens and cages nearby. A flock of show pigeons coos and flaps freely overhead.

The fowl, some domestic and some from far corners of the world, live a life of luxury behind a high fence in full view of traffic on Winnebago County Trunk P just inside the city limits of Menasha.

Cars often pull off the highway onto a side road to allow their occupants to take a closer look at the birds Watters is raising.

People aren't the only passersby to show an interest. During the migration season this fall, Watters more than once has heard Canada geese exchanging greetings with his own honkers — and showing a strong inclination to drop in for a chat and a taste of the tame birds' high-protein feed.

Watters began as a hobbyist, but lately has been talking like a professional breeder. He's gone to Madison to confer with University of Wisconsin biologists and learn the techniques of artificial breeding.

He's a member of the American Pheasant and Waterfowl Association, and attends conventions in various parts of the country. Besides the good fellowship he finds among members, he says he picks up plenty of useful information about raising birds. He's looking forward to a trip to San Diego, Calif., to renew his acquaintance with the head zookeeper, whom he met at an association convention. San Diego has one of the most complete zoos in the nation.

Extensive reading fills out Watters' supply of information.

His is no half-hearted hobby, but one that demands sufficient enthusiasm to put up with endless fuss and feathers. And a collection of birds as large as this gobbles up no small amount of cash.

Depending on the breed, Watters has spent sums ranging from $10 to $150 for a pair of birds. Some are relatively common. There are the Canada geese familiar to Wisconsin hunters, and a Chinese brown goose often seen on farms; common Mallard and pintail ducks and ringneck pheasants.

But there are also an Egyptian goose, multi-hued Mandarin ducks, and pheasants of breeds including waited until he learned that the 32nd not only had taken over all the strategic positions to the north of the river, but that they were entrenched solidly and were holding them.

"Oui, Oui, Les Soldats Terribles," he is supposed to have said, ending up with the phrase "tres bien, tres bien." ("very good, very good.") The name stuck. When French Gen. Mangin later requested that the 32nd Division join his famous 10th Army of shock troops for the offensive north of Soisson in the Oise-Aisne region, he asked for "Les Terribles." The 32nd was the only American unit to fight with this crack French 10th Army.

Outagamie County's Company A, 150th Machine Gun Battalion of the Rainbow (42nd) Division, saw action in France a bit earlier than friends from home in the Red Arrow (32nd) Division. The Rainbow men trained briefly at Camp Mills, N.Y. Company A left Camp Douglas for New York on Labor Day, 1917, and sailed with the division Oct. 18 for more intensive training in France.

Ship Tuscania Torpedoed

The troop transport, Covington, carried these men safely across the ocean but it was torpedoed later. The 32nd didn't have such a smooth start. Their troop ship Tuscania, was torpedoed and sunk by a German submarine off the coast of Ireland on Feb. 5, 1918.

Thirteen men, including Sgt. James P. Hawley, of Neenah, lost their lives in the disaster. Appleton newspaper offices were besieged with relatives of men thought to be on the ship. Word reached Appleton that four of the city's soldiers were aboard, then six more area names were added the next day. They all finally were reported safe. They were Arthur Steffen and Harry Collar from Hortonville and Appleton soldiers Irwin Meidam, Theodore L. Briggs, Paul Van Wyk, McKinley Robinson, Capt. Henry Pettigrew, and Sgts. Arthur Hantschel, Jacob Schneider and Eric Galpin.

The Appleton Post, in a special Welcome Home edition to the Rainbow men, published May 16, 1919, called the company's war record "wonderful," quoting an Ohio officer's praise, "We would go through hell with Company A laying down a barrage ahead of us."

The Post added its own personal assessment, "With the reputation of being one of the best machine gun companies in the entire American Army, Company A, 150th Machine Gun Battalion, formerly Company G of the Second Wisconsin Regiment, has earned the plaudits of military commanders the country over."

Most of the Company A men were wounded shortly after action started in the Champagne region (July 15-18). This also was their baptism of fire and from then on the fighting was almost constant. The company fought on as many or more fronts than any other Army unit, the newspaper declared. During the Champagne-Marne offensive, Outagamie men took an important part in the routing of the noted Prussian Guards by the Rainbow Division. This success led to their becoming shock troops, being sent to trouble spots wherever they cropped up.

Germans Try a Trick

In July and August, Company A fought in practically all the skirmishes and battles north of Chateau Thierry. It was in the course of this fighting that the Germans tried a ruse on the machine gunners. Wearing captured French uniforms, they attempted to surprise the Americans.

Luckily, they were Americans plus one Frenchman. A detachment of French troops were ahead of the machine gunners when the latter took their positions. Running into serious trouble, the French started a retreat; as they passed the Appleton boys they shouted for them to fall back.

But the company couldn't see things that way, deciding to hang on and defend their positions. One of the Frenchmen stayed behind with the Americans. It was fortunate he did.

Soon a body of men in French uniforms was spotted coming from the German lines. Men in Company A were puzzled at what appeared to be Frenchmen approaching their gun positions.

Holding their fire until the "Frenchmen" came closer, it was the visiting Frenchman who saw through the deception first. Yelling "Boches!" he called out to his comrades to open fire. The Americans did just that with the result the oncoming Germans piled up in stacks like cordwood. Only a few were able to get out of range.

Maj. Graef's Orders

The success and fighting spirit of Company A has been credited to their commander, Lothar G. Graef, Appleton, whose rank was captain throughout most of the war. He was made a major just before returning home in May, 1919.

"The gun crew of this gun," he ordered each of his units "will take its battle post with full equipment. Every member of the gun crew must know the mission of the gun, firing data, and all orders pertaining to the position.

"This position will be held in case of attack to the last man and the last round of ammunition. If capture is unavoidable, destroy your gun. There will be no retreat."

The Wisconsin men in both divisions quickly became seasoned veterans, fighting in each of the major French offensives and on many fronts. They fought the Germans, they chased the Germans; in between times they harassed the enemy and penetrated deep into their lines. The "boys from home" even managed to fight side by side in the drive from Chateau Thierry to Fismes.

Both groups were in the Meuse-Argonne sector in the early days of November. Although Company A had gone on to a new location, they were nearby. It was here the men of both divisions learned that the fighting was over on Nov. 11, but for them their service was needed still as members of the Army of Occupation.

1. Define "Clues," writing definitions in answer column over numbered dashes.
2. Transfer letters to numbered squares in diagram; the black squares separate words.
3. When pattern is completed, quotation can be read from left to right. The first letters of the answer words, reading down, form an acrostic yielding the speaker's name.

Diplomat George Kennan Reviews His Career in 'Intellectual Autobiography'

By Miles A. Smith

Memoirs 1925-1950. By George F. Kennan. Little, Brown. $10.

The general reader often associates the word "memoirs" with personal, intimate and often colorful recollections. In this book the word is taken in its more formal, exact sense as a record or history written from personal knowledge.

In short, this is not a gossipy, entertaining adventure story. The author calls it primarily an "intellectual autobiography." It makes dry use of his ample diaries and the innumerable position papers, often professorial, that he wrote for the State Department. What it amounts to is a review of his professional career as a diplomat. Consequently, its chief appeal would be to the serious student of international affairs.

It covers the years from his entrance into the foreign service to his temporary departure in 1950. As one of the first of America's Russian experts, he was in Moscow at critical times—with Ambassador Bullitt in the '30s, and as chief aide to Ambassador Harriman in 1941-46. He also witnessed the fall of Czechoslovakia and was in Germany when America entered World War II. His work on the Marshall Plan and his preparation in 1948 of a change in occupation policy in Japan are what he considers his major contributions.

He left the service in 1950 because he was out of tune with the administration's policies on NATO, Germany, Central Europe and nuclear policy.

Under the smooth professional aplomb of the diplomat there seems to have been some human reactions to the way governments operate. For example, it perturbed him no end when his reports seemed to be ignored in Washington; and he thought it absurd that his superiors had to consider what Congress might do about foreign affairs, for he felt Congress had no business sticking its nose into such matters. He concedes at one point that he was naïve about that.

Annexed to the book are several of his most important papers on Russia, and students of diplomacy may find him implying an "I told you so" on at least some points.

Wilderness Kingdom — The Journals and Paintings of Father Nicolas Point. Holt, Rinehart. $17.95.

The publication of this book has rescued from near-oblivion the valuable impressions—in words and pictures—of a man who saw an important part of our early history.

Father Point was the diarist and recorder of a small Jesuit mission to the Indian country of the Rocky Mountains (Idaho and Montana) between 1840 and 1847, a period when only a few white traders had reached the area.

He wrote about the Indians' customs, camps, hunting, medicine and witchcraft, their beliefs and their tribal wars. As an untrained painter, he preserved in many miniatures the images of the Indians he met and their ways of life.

His favorites were the Flatheads, but he also became acquainted with Couers d'Alenes, Blackfeet, Crows, Nez Perces and others. He studied not only the people but also the flora and fauna of the territory he visited.

Father Point was a contemporary of the American painter George Catlin, and while less skilled as an artist, he has preserved a graphic record of many scenes that otherwise would have been lost. His journal and its illustrations were almost forgotten in a Jesuit archive near Montreal until they were rediscovered by a Jesuit scholar, Joseph P. Donnelly, who translated the text.

This journal and its 230 illustrations are an important item for anyone interested in American Indians, anthropology and natural history—and all the Western history buffs.

THE NEW ROMANS: An American Experience By John Keats. Lippincott. $5.95

This is a case in which the jester shoves his comic mask aside and lets the lines of worry show as he ruefully ruminates on the present state of our country.

Keats is a witty man and an experienced lampooner of our social idiocies. If it's humor you're looking for, there is plenty of it here. But there is more.

His title is a suggestion that whether we like it or not, a reluctant America has had imperialism thrust upon her by default, and as the world's current experts in soldiery, lawgiving and road-building, we are akin to the ancient Romans.

In assessing America today, the author uses his own personal history as his frame of reference. He speaks for the generation now in their 40s, who were "born into the mindlessness of Prohibition, a time of hypocrisy; as adolescents experienced the Great Depression, a time of utter disillusion," were "marched off into the horror of Hitler's War" and for two decades "have skittered along the edge of holocaust."

What Keats is trying to do is to sort out the difference between the American dream and the American fact—equating the latter with the word "trash." He holds forth only a little hope for the future, on the ground that Americans are doggedly accustomed to assuming we'll snap out of our troubles eventually.

What disturbs him most is a loss of a sense of values, the replacement of the hero image by an anti-hero. And he is worried about the chasm between the generations as anyone, attributing it to the child-centered, permissive patterns of recent society.

It might be a good idea to read this book once for its amusing social commentary, and a second time for deeper meanings and deeper significance.

House of Bondage. By Ernest Cole. Random. $10.

America, for all its racial troubles, is far removed from the legislated apartheid segregation of South Africa. Perhaps that's one reason why this gripping book produces an indignation of smoking intensity.

Ernest Cole, the 27-year-old black South African author, used sharp wits, old-fashioned brass and good luck for six years to take photographs secretly that would have brought instant arrest had his purpose been discovered: then smuggled them and himself out of his homeland one jump ahead of the law.

But while he intended to shed light on the seldom-seen, squalorous lives of his nation's black majority, perhaps the book's greatest value in this country will be to focus attention on racial 'brutality' effects on the race on the bottom.

The text, written by Cole and Thomas Flaherty, associate editor of Life magazine, outlines the results of the great chasm of cruelty which separates life for black South Africans from the sun-splashed sporting resort pictured in the government's tourist brochures.

Cole's expressed belief that "the split between black and white in South Africa is irreconcilable" makes it clear that South Africa may be creating a monster that could one day turn on her minority white population in a savage orgy of violence.

Drawing parallels between America and South Africa is of limited usefulness. The U.S. government is striving to open its society at the same time the South African government is committed to closing doors.

One of the difficult things to forget are the despairing faces in so many of Cole's photographs, faces that bear a haunting resemblance to so many in Harlem, Watts and Chicago's South Side.

Octogenarian Bolton Readies New Musical

NEW YORK (AP) — Guy Bolton, who began writing for the stage 55 years ago, is putting the finishing touches on two more musical comedy prospects.

The 82-year-old author has prepared the books for shows tentatively entitled "What's Happening, Baby" and "A Song for Anastasia." The latter is a reworking of "Anya," tested briefly on Broadway two seasons ago.

"I'm writing as much as I ever did," says Bolton. "When you get older, outside interests diminish. But your work doesn't if it's interesting."

About the Biggest Trust of All

BY Reynard

Riverton II

— SPOKESTOWN MONITOR, Dec. 11, 1967

Word filtering out of Washington, D. C., has it that the next target of the Justice Department's bright young men may well be the biggest corporation of them all — General Motors.

A task force of Justice attorneys, it is reported, has already drawn up a sample brief, intended — or so it would appear — to persuade the courts to order the nation's largest automaker to divide itself, amoeba-like, into two or more of its component divisions.

It might be noted, in all fairness, that the White House has denied that any firm decision has yet been made on the matter. A spokesman for President Johnson told newsmen that the brief aimed at the breakup of GM remains in suspended animation, pending further study.

(It might also be observed, parenthetically, that such a move against one of Michigan's major employers, might very well stir up a considerable amount of animosity toward the Administration in an election year.)

Drawbacks of Bigness

Be that as it may, confirmation of the existence of even a tentative plan to move against GM has set your servant to cogitating about the inherent drawbacks of bigness in American life. And these meditations, in turn, have led Reynard to wonder, in all seriousness, why the trust busters — if only for the sake of argument — don't, temporarily at least, turn their legal spotlights in the opposite direction, and consider the advantages to be gained by breaking up the biggest monopolies of them all — the principal departments of the United States government.

Lest Reynard appear to be aligning himself with either the anarchists at the far left or the anti-statists at the far right of the political spectrum, let it be hastily explained that he would neither eliminate nor even substantially reduce the present size of the government.

Like General Motors, the government has established its assorted agencies and departments, over a period of nearly 200 years, in order to meet specific needs. And, in general, it is serving these needs tolerably well.

But unlike General Motors' Pontiac, Chevrolet and Oldsmobile divisions, the operating divisions of the Federal Government have no real competition anywhere in sight. If one does not wish to buy a Chevrolet automobile, he can always buy a Plymouth Rambler, Ford or Hispano-Suiza (slightly-used but in mint condition). But if one does not wish to buy the policies formulated by the U. S. State and Defense Departments, for example, there is no opportunity to purchase an alternative product at a store just a few steps down the street.

This fact surely would not be lost on the Justice department's investigative team.

Bigger Than GM

The Defense Department is, in point of fact, the very epitome of Bigness. It is bigger than General Motors and DuPont combined. It totally monopolizes the design, procurement and use of major weapons in the U.S.A., and in many places throughout the world. It exercises virtually absolute control over the physical well-being of hundreds of thousands of young men.

Similarly, the Department of State has a total monopoly on the setting and execution of foreign policy. Since the department has no real competition (except, perhaps, from the increasingly frustrated pundits in the Senate, on television and in the press), the ultimate consumer, the citizen-taxpayer, has no alternative but to give his financial support to whatever brand of foreign policy a secretary and his associates happen to be producing and marketing at any given time.

The Justice Department could scarcely consider this a healthy situation in our consumer-oriented society — a society in which the government itself is heavily committed to assuring for all its citizens, a free interchange of goods, services and ideas.

Reynard's modest suggestion, then, is that a task force of agile-minded young attorneys be assigned to the job of extending the principles of free enterprise and unfettered competition into the trust-dominated fields of foreign policy and military strategy.

Perhaps the trust-busters could set as their goal the division of each of the existing governmental departments into two or more independently-managed, competitively-gearred organizations — just as the government itself, a few years ago, forced Loew's, Inc., a manufacturer and exhibitor of motion pictures, to fragment itself into two separate corporations.

Orange and Blue

The State Department, for example, could be split into a pair of highly-motivated, but mutually-opposed agencies — to be known, perhaps, as State Department "Orange" and State Department "Blue." (Neither red nor yellow strikes Reynard as a particularly appropriate designation for these rival State Departments.)

Each of the newly-created agencies would be charged with the responsibility of formulating, and presenting to the public, a foreign policy responsive to the needs, ideals and best interests of the greatest number of "consumers" — i.e., voters and taxpayers.

Accordingly, each would be headed by its own Secretary of State, advised by as competent a team of researchers, statisticians, diplomats and international-relations experts as he could gather about him.

It would be the responsibility of each of these competing agencies to formulate and "bring to market", just before tax collection time each year, the very best foreign policy it could devise — hoping, through modern techniques of presentation and communication, to persuade the consuming public to "purchase" it.

Thus, instead of having his foreign policy imposed upon him from above, the voter-taxpayer would be in the enviable position of choosing between two carefully-developed plans, each designed to appeal to him on the basis of its rationality, its comprehensiveness and its simple humanity.

The nation's diplomats would, in this way, be given an annual opportunity to explain their philosophies, chart the nation's ultimate course and "package" their objectives attractively and compellingly.

For his part, the individual consumer would carefully study the alternatives open to him, then "buy" either the "Orange" (or Hawkish) foreign policy or the "Blue" (or Dovish) foreign policy.

Income Tax Choice

He would, on April 15, indicate his choice by making a mark at the appropriate point in his income tax return.

Such a purchase-decision would in no way deprive the government of needed revenue, since the consumer who did not wish his tax money to be used for instruments of destruction could designate that it be applied to programs of urban renewal and/or foreign economic assistance.

Not only would this arrangement permit the policy makers to be somewhat more responsive to the wishes of the persons whose billions they are disbursing, but it would provide a more satisfying outlet for the ideas of the younger, sometimes more imaginative policy makers, who do not always agree with the dogmas pronounced by the more conservative "Orange" secretary of state, but might be drawn to the philosophy of his more liberal "Blue" competitor.

In the same way, the two, competitively-organized Defense Departments could vie with each other in cutting costs in procurement, in avoiding waste and duplication, and in devising a truly effective military strategy. Again, the plans of one or the other would be "purchased" by the action of the "consumer."

Now that this program has been proposed in print, Reynard is certain that the Justice Department will be galvanized into action. Why, after all, try to break up General Motors, when it is, at best, small potatoes compared to Uncle Sam himself?

Tossed Out Like Waste Paper, Puppies, Old Dogs Languish, Die of Exposure, Neglect

"... He was too old ... The family didn't want him any more."

THE green, late-model sedan slowed to a halt as it passed an attractive-looking farm. The driver surveyed the farm, its buildings sweltering in the hot afternoon sun. No one seemed about.

The driver opened his door and placed a half-grown, black-and-white pup on the road. Without bothering to get out, he shoved the pup in the direction of the farm driveway.

The perplexed pup tried unsuccessfully to return to the car. Again, he was shoved back. The car door was slammed shut in his face. The car pulled forward, narrowly missing the small dog.

At the sight of the retreating car, the pup jumped up and ran after it as fast as his small legs could carry him. Dust and grit from the speeding wheels blinded and choked him. Try as he might, he was no match for the speeding vehicle. Soon, he was left far behind.

Finally, exhausted by his vain effort, he stopped, panting, and sat down in the middle of the country road.

He was confused, bewildered... abandoned. Yet he was not alone. In spirit, he had joined the thousands of dogs and cats that are thoughtlessly "dumped" every year by their unthinking and unfeeling "owners."

Unthinking Mischief

True, the home the small pup had had was possibly not the best; but it was the only one he knew. Some unthinking puppy mischief had made the family decide it didn't really want a dog. The animal had proved to be too much work, too much bother and more care than the family was willing to expend. Cheaply acquired, the pup was now cheaply disposed of.

What of the puppy and the thousands like him? Was he so completely worthless and expendable that he should now earn the reward of being discarded like waste paper, and with about as much kindness involved?

"Out of sight, out of mind." "Let nature take its course." "Instinct will carry through." An instinct, mind you, that has been dormant, during the thousands of years dog has associated himself with man.

What a way to treat "man's best friend!"

Not just puppies, but cats, kittens and dogs of all ages are the objects of abandonment. Not even the old dog that has been its master's true friend through many a long year, escapes.

A case in point: An Appleton area family had owned a dog for many years. Since he was no longer young, the family wanted to dispose of him. They couldn't bear to put him to sleep. That would be "too cruel." Thus, the father took the old fellow to a nearby railroad yard, placed the dog in a box car, shut the door and walked away.

The freight moved out, headed for Minneapolis. Somewhere along the way, someone opened the car door and the dog escaped.

A week later, the man heard a faint scratching at the door. Upon checking, he found the old dog, his coat unkempt, his ribs showing, his pads cut and bleeding. He had come back to the only home he knew, the only master he loved.

Pregnant bitches are also abandoned. The owner doesn't want the bother of puppies and the resultant work. Why not have the dog spayed? "It costs too much." "It's cruel." "She will get fat." Needless to say, they don't bother to watch her at the critical time. Now it is all her fault, certainly not theirs. Get rid of her.

City people somehow have the notion that rural folk are anxious to have all the dogs nobody else wants. What better place, they think, than "a nice farm" where the dog will have "room to run." A nice theory, but it doesn't hold water.

If a farmer wants a dog, or dogs, he prefers one of his choice, not someone else's. The abandoned dog may be vicious or surly, either through poor treatment at home or because of his abandonment.

What happens to these unfortunate, unwanted animals?

They may get lucky and find a home. Don't count on it.

More often they are hit and killed by a speeding car as they sit forlornly, waiting for their master's car to come back for them. They may be hurt or injured and left to die alone in some roadside ditch.

Cats are as much victims of abandonment as dogs, possibly more so. Cats cannot survive the bitter cold our area experiences.

Two case histories will point up the utter cruelty of dumping animals. Both were told by rural residents, both are true:

One winter night, someone dropped two small kittens near a farm. Seeking shelter from the cold, they slowly crept toward the barn. The farmer was a kindly man; seeing the small animals, he attempted to catch and put them in his warm dairy barn, for he knew that that winter night would be a bitter one.

As soon as he approached, the two youngsters ran away. He returned to his chores, hoping that when he finished, he would be able to coax them into the barn. He even set out a warm dish of milk for them, but they were too frightened and too upset to come. Finishing chores, he again made several futile attempts to catch the kittens.

Before going into the house, he opened a door to a small shed, hoping the kittens would find at least some degree of warmth in its merger shelter.

The next morning, he saw one of the kittens sitting by the shed window. Hoping to catch it, he went inside and walked up to it. It didn't move. It had frozen to death on that very spot the night before. Its small companion lay dead on the floor several feet away.

The other case concerns two half-grown pups. Again, they had been deposited near a farm by their "master".

Unaccustomed to the busy world into which they had been suddenly thrust, one pup was hit by a speeding car and hurled into the ditch.

One of the farmer's sons heard the pitiful cries, called his father, and upon investigating found the badly-injured animal. His small companion was sitting a few feet away. As they approached, it ran off, across the road into a wooded and swampy area.

While the son went in search of the frightened animal, his father attended to the injured one. There was nothing to be done. The animal must be put out of its misery as quickly as possible. Sorrowfully, the farmer went home and got his gun.

Fruitless Search

The son returned after a fruitless search for the other animal. It had vanished, probably to die of starvation or exposure.

"You know," the farmer commented, "things like this happen all the time. What's the matter with people, anyway?"

I had no answer for him.

If a person finds he cannot keep an animal any longer, and he cannot find a home for it, there are only two humane ways to resolve the problem.

One is to take it to the veterinarian and have it "put to sleep." At small cost to the owner, this will insure that the animal will not be a victim of accident or auto, starve or freeze to death.

Or, he can take his animal to the nearest humane shelter. It is important, however, to take the animal to the shelter when an attendant is on duty. Too many times, the attendant will arrive at the shelter to find animals tied to the door, or roaming around loose.

If the animal is pregnant, don't drop it over a 6-foot cyclone fence and leave, as was recently done.

You may not think that this is a problem of any large proportion here, yet in Outagamie county alone, over 100 dogs were abandoned last month.

There used to be a saying, "The meanest man in the world is the dog catcher." I wonder.

Fluorescent Lights, Boon to Plant Growers

By Katherine B. Walker

The first fluorescent light set-ups for use with plants were almost prohibitively expensive except for the more affluent indoor gardeners. Consequently, every handyman (and some not so handy!) who wanted these busied himself designing and building his own units at a lesser cost. This soon led manufacturers of fluorescents to realize they had a large potential market for this product. Now a wide variety is available, and happily, at a price most of us can afford to pay. A catalog from one of the growers on our Source Sheet offers a number of fluorescent units, beginning at around $15, complete with an adjustable light stand and tubes. (For a copy of the Source Sheet write to Katherine B. Walker, in care of this newspaper, enclosing a self-addressed, stamped envelope.)

If you have never tried growing house plants under fluorescent lights, you can't imagine how truly exciting it can be. These units quite literally enable you to grow plants any place in your home. I have one, equipped with legs to support the hood and a waterproof tray which fits between them; this is at the end of a long, windowless hall. In it are variegated foliage plants such as fancy-leaved begonias, marantas, calatheas, fittonia, variegated ivy and so on. When I want it to look especially lovely, I highlight the foliage plants with a pot of wax begonias in heavy bloom, an azalea, or whatever showy flowering plant is in season.

Another unit, actually just a standard two-tube ceiling fixture, is mounted on the underside of a long library table. Here, where there formerly was only waste space, I now have a four-foot long galvanized metal container filled with my choicest foliage and flowering plants.

Adequate light is one of the most important factors in good plant growth, and if your home doesn't provide adequate amounts of natural light, or if you simply want plants where no natural light is available, do try these wonderful plant lights. In general, plants that "top out" at a predictable height will be best for you to begin with, and the necessary distance between the lights and the plants will vary from a few inches to a foot or more, depending upon what plants you grow. With a little experimenting, you'll find which of your plants do best under fluorescent lighting, as well as how close they need to be to the tubes. Do ask Santa for a plant-light this year; you couldn't get a nicer gift for year-around use.

Q. What is the right name for Swedish Ivy? And how can I keep the leaves variegated with lots of white in them? They tend to turn all green.

A. This is plectranthus. Variegation in color usually depends upon the amount of light the plant receives; the stronger the light, the more pronounced the variegation.

Q. Here's a puzzle for you: When we first built this house, we planned indoor gardens to complement the vistas of the outdoor gardens. Now, our indoor plants do fairly well during the winter, but almost die during the summer. Isn't this just opposite to what they should do?

There are any number of explanations that come to mind, but the first thought I had is this: Are your trees and other outdoor plants now large enough to cause a radical reduction in the amount of light indoors? This would cause your house plants to ail during the summer, then when the trees shed their leaves and no longer blocked the light, would permit them to perk up during their supposedly "off" months.

DEAR HELOISE:

If you want to make a quick toy for the youngster, try an accordion spinner.

All you need are two 18-inch pieces of string and a plastic lid from a coffee can.

Trim off the edge of the lid so you will have a perfectly flat disk and punch because ordinary wrapping string will wear and break.

It takes a little practice to get them started but when they spin, they really go! And what fun they are for the little ones.

DEAR HELOISE:

For amateur gardeners everywhere, here's a hint on long-lasting, inexpensive and easy-to-make plant markers:

Take aluminum pie plates and cut the bottoms out with an old pair of scissors.

Cut each bottom into four equal quarter sections. Fold each piece together leaving about a one-eighth-inch "lip" down the long side. Bend this "lip" over the short side and with a small hammer, pound down firmly. This way there are no sharp edges.

Punch a hole in the narrow end and print or write the name of plant or variety with a ball point pen. Use thin aluminum wire to attach this little tag to the plant and there you are—rustproof, rotproof, and almost indestructible markers.

Oblong or square tags can be made from bottom sections of TV dinner trays, breakfast roll trays, etc.

Favorite Island Of Sea Birds

Yields Phosphate

By W. R. Doberstein

In the vast expanse of the Pacific, land masses are overwhelmingly in the minority. Like a sparse sprinkling of pepper on a large blue tablecloth, the chunks of solid earth in this anything-but-placid body of water are like the meat in some restaurant soup—few and far between. There's the Hawaiian group, of course, where some of the chunks are more substantial. And over toward Australia and New Zealand a few islands get beyond the speck category on a typical Atlas map.

So it's not surprising that students of geography, in order to simplify matters a bit, have taken most of the specks and grouped them into three super families—Micronesia, Melanesia and Polynesia (all easier to pronounce if you have a bad cold). In Micronesia, some of the family members gained news familiarity during WWII—like the Marianas and the Marshall Islands and Wake and Guam and Truk in the Carolinas. But after the Japs were licked, these collections of coral atolls relapsed back into being small geography. With one exception, for sure.

Nauru (nah-OO-roo) is certainly one crazy exception. And all because sea birds love Nauru. Starting during World War I, this single tiny island—eight square miles, 5,000 population—rated its own postage stamps. At first they were overprints of British issues. Then, starting in 1924, Nauru was accorded not only original stamp printings but even some exclusive stamp designs. Why? Because this island is a treasury of phosphate.

Remarkable beds of guano (bird manure), reacting with the coral deposits, have become a mine of valuable fertilizer to be harvested and exported, mostly to Australia and New Zealand. Take away their phosphate and the Nauruans are just another very small-city-size group of citizens. And for all their remarkable bulk, it is estimated that the phosphate deposits will be depleted in perhaps 20 years. Then what?

Nevertheless, Nauru is making some small waves in the news world—and problems for those who have to honor the democratic precedent of self determination. Nauru wants to become an independent nation. Well, they got their own postage stamps. So they think big on this speck just 26 miles south of the equator. They might be given autonomy. It does seem for the birds. But if it really happens, it's more like from the birds . . . great phosphates grow.

Writer Says Skill, Not Chance, Determines Bridge, Poker Winners

By Alfred Sheinwold

The late Albert H. Morehead, after a lifetime as an authority on card games, could say with assurance that skill was the predominant factor in determining which player won. In "The Complete Guide to Winning Poker," just published by Simon and Schuster (he had just finished the manuscript before his untimely death last year), Morehead wrote:

"Poker is farther from a gambling game than almost any other card game you can think of, even contract bridge. . . If you aren't beating the game, you are being outplayed. There is a reason why you lose, even if you can't figure it out. . . For nearly all players the cards even up in the long run. They do not come out exactly even—that would be as unusual, over the course of a lifetime, as for a player always to have 10 per cent the better of it—but they come close to even. A consistently bad card-holder will still have enough percentage to be a winner. If he is a poor card-holder he may win a little less than he should, and if he is a good card-holder he may win a little more, but he will still win."

Nobody bothers to keep track of the aces and kings in rubber bridge, but many long matches have been published and it is an easy matter to count the high cards to see how they even out. For example, in a match of 300 hands between England and America, the aces and kings were divided as follows:

	NORTH	EAST	SOUTH	WEST
Aces	287	297	310	306
Kings	301	303	299	297

It's instructive to see how little is the effect of luck on the outcome of a typical bridge hand:

West leads the nine of hearts against the contract of four spades. South plays low from the dummy, and East wins with the king. The deuce of hearts goes to dummy's ace, and East takes the trump return with the ace of spades. East now shifts to the deuce of clubs.

South must lose a club in addition to the heart and spade already given up. South will make his contract if he can "guess" which opponent has the queen of diamonds, since he can finesse for the queen in either direction. The average player would guess right about 50 per cent of the time in such situations. The skillful player embarks on a campaign to find out which opponent was dealt the queen of diamonds.

When East returns the deuce of clubs South tries a finesse with the jack. This loses to the queen, and back comes a heart to the queen. South draws another round of trumps, leads a trump to dummy's eight and returns the ten of clubs from dummy. East covers with the king of clubs, and South ruffs. And now South knows that West has the queen of diamonds.

It seems very mysterious until you work it out.

Sir Donald Burns Sangster, the late prime minister of Jamaica, has been honored by his country with the issuance of two postage stamps, reports the Crown Agents Bureau. The threepence and one shilling sixpence feature an oval portrait of the prime minister and his dates, 1911-1967.

He was educated at Munro College, Jamaica, and was involved in Jamaican politics for many years, holding the posts of minister of finance, minister of social welfare and leader of the House of Representatives. Sangster was elected to the first Parliament of Independent Jamaica in 1962. In February of 1967 he became prime minister but unfortunately lived only a couple of months thereafter. He was given knighthood a few days before his death on April 11, 1967.

East has shown up with the ace-jack of spades, king of hearts and the king of clubs. If East also has the queen of diamonds he would have opened bidding with his 13 points in high cards and his 10 club. But East passed. Therefore he cannot have the queen of diamonds.

Armed with this information, South needs no more to make his game; he is virtually certain to make it. Notice that word "virtually." There are few absolute certainties in bridge—not because it is a game of chance but because there are so many opportunities for skill.

When declarer leads the ten of clubs from dummy, a truly expert East will play the nine of clubs rather than the king. He must do so with the air of unconcern because it would never do to let South know that the king of clubs is in the East. (South could throw a diamond on dummy's ten of clubs if he knew the truth.) If South is deceived, he will ruff the ten of clubs and will not know that he started with 11 points in high cards. South will then guess the diamond play instead of having a virtual certainty. But if South suspects the truth, he will be quite sure enough to discard on the ten of clubs, he may locate the queen of diamonds and defeat East's crafty play. Bridge is a battle of wits, not a gamble or a guessing contest.

Hundreds of spectators stood in line to await a sample tasting of the 770-egg omelet prepared at the 1967 Iowa State Fair by the Iowa Poultry Association.

Omelet Orgy

By Rod Vahl

THERE is a new race underway and records have fallen drastically as omelet fiends compete to outdo the other in cooking the "world's largest omelet."

It started about two years ago when members of the Iowa Poultry Association decided to prepare a giant omelet at their annual convention in Sioux City. Using 36 eggs, the association members initiated a race which then jumped to Chicago in January, 1967.

In the Windy City, the Poultry and Egg National Board of America eagerly met at the Chicago Mercantile Exchange and enjoyed a few scoffing jokes about Iowa's 36-egg omelet. To add fuel to the fire, they called the Iowan attempt a "woman's game," and immediately concocted an omelet that featured not 36 eggs, but a grand total of 600 eggs!

Back in Iowa, poultry farmers soon recovered from this humiliating defeat and wasted no time in contacting officials of the Iowa State Fair Board in Des Moines, suggesting to them that it might be quite an experience for urban and rural fair-goers to witness a record-shattering performance right at the fairgrounds.

As soon as the wise men of the fair board heard that this would be the "world's largest omelet," they gave their consent. And on Aug. 23, more than a thousand spectators crowded around a stage where over a dozen poultrymen prepared an omelet which highlighted 770 eggs, or a grand total of 65 dozen!

After one-and-a-half hours of cooking in a six-foot wide skillet over a gas-fueled oven, the omelet was served to the spectators who lined up for the length of a football field for a "historic" morsel from the "world's largest omelet."

In the event that any ambitious housewife might harbor a culinary passion to duplicate or outdo the Iowa Poultry Association, she should note first the ingredients of the record-breaking omelet prepared at the 1967 Iowa State Fair.

10 pounds of mushrooms
4 pounds of green onions

Long, Unusual Theater Trek

By William Glover

NEW YORK (AP) — A do-it-yourself band of actors is making the longest and most unusual theatrical trek of the year.

In eight months, the company rolls by bus across 30,000 miles of U.S. and Canadian roads, visits 99 cities, gives 250 performances for some 300,000 spectators.

Such statistics could impress even a David Merrick. But the greatest distinction of the operation is that it is being done without a single penny of those private donations or philanthropic grants that loom so large in cultural endeavor these days. "We're the only professional company operating in this way," claims Philip Meister, "and there should be at least 10 others traveling like us."

Meister and his wife, Elaine Sulka, founded the National Shakespeare Company five years ago "on one key premise: that we could and can exist without subsidy."

Each season since, the company has extended the number of playing weeks, lengthened the mileage and been rewarded with growing interest.

Each season, too, operating costs have jumped, from $28,000 in 1963 to $192,000 today.

The director, a man of furrowed brow and jutting jaw, isn't unalterably opposed to largesse. "We'd like to upgrade work and pay higher salaries," he admits. But he cites a recent incident to emphasize what he regards as a major disadvantage of much of the current currency giving.

The company received an invitation from the National Endowment for the Arts, Washington's official culture catalyst, to apply for a possible grant. The catch for Meister in this and most allotments available from private foundations is that they are made on a matching basis. "That means you have to have someone on the payroll constantly who does nothing but try to get local contributions to match the grant," he says. "I'd rather keep a man busy rounding up performance dates."

The current season of NSC is to be marked by three firsts: the first invasion of Canada, at Calgary, B.C., next March; the first use of an ingenious aluminum set that rapidly adjusts to the variety of playing circumstances that range from small chapels to vast arenas, and a first New York engagement in December.

About 65 per cent of the bookings are at colleges; 25 per cent at high schools; the balance strictly commercial engagements at tent theaters. Most are for a flat fee, occasionally for a guarantee against a certain box-office gross.

In Chicago, Colorado Springs and a Missouri school district, NSC benefits from funds provided by the federal education department.

"We're frankly an experiment in a lot of places," says Meister. "They are more used to booking concerts and jazz performers."

A number of spots invite them back in alternate years and Massena, N.Y., is having them back this time for a fourth engagement. Communities in 27 states are being visited.

Local sponsors are offered a choice of three plays—this year Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night" and "Romeo and Juliet" and Jonson's "Volpone."

The array gives a strenuous workout to the 11 players. And the rigors of bus travel are another challenge to sustained artistic vigor.

"It's very tiring at first," says actor Ian Thomson, "but after a while you get into a certain rhythm. Besides, it's better than sitting around in Michelle Lee and Tony Randall are two of the lead players in "Stagedoor Johnny" on "Kraft Music Hall" Wednesday on NBC. Randall is the title star.

New York or Los Angeles like a lot of players do for the main chance, whatever that is."

Meister, who learned his craft through such tasks as prop boy in burlesque to director of off Broadway hits, looks forward to increasing versatility in the company's future.

Michael Howard, artistic director of Atlanta's Municipal Theater, is participating for example this year as the stager of "Twelfth Night."

For 1968-69 John Houseman, one of show world's most eminent talents, is to direct a production of Eliot's "Murder in the Cathedral."

And although Shakespeare's name will remain in the title, Meister expects that gradually the group will expand repertoire versatility to embrace a wide assortment of past and modern works.

"We have felt we had to earn the right to do that," he says, stressing a group feeling that self-reliant pioneers must first win audiences with familiar favorites.

'Dolly' Gets Her Own Show

By Don Royal

"A hundred and one men and me. I think that's nice! It really is! A hundred and one men and that's not even counting the orchestra!"

"Actually, I didn't need that many men. You can have too much of a good thing. Eighty-five would have been more than enough! Counting the orchestra! And the ushers!"

The words are Carol Channing's and they kick off what is designed to be a sparkling, slam-bang hour of entertainment, "Carol Channing and 101 Men," ABC-TV, Thursday, 8-9 p.m.

Carol's guests on the color-cast are the Academy-award winning actor Walter Matthau (making his television variety debut) singer Eddy Arnold, the upcoming young singing group known as The Association, and the United States Air Force Academy Cadet Chorale.

The show is one of the many irons Carol has in the fire — a total of six television specials, three motion pictures and a musical for David Merrick, who produced "Hello, Dolly!" on Broadway, coming up in 1970.

"David," says Carol, "won't tell me what the show's about, because if he tells me, I'll tell everybody. I think he's talking to Gower Champion (who directed and choreographed "Dolly") about it.

"David doesn't like me to call him lovable, as I always do. He says it destroys his Scrooge image. But I do love him, he's a wonderful man."

Merrick has excellent reason to love her right back, for she kindled the "Hello, Dolly!" madness, his biggest hit in a long career studded with hits. As the first and greatest Dolly of them all, Carol grossed over $17 million on Broadway and on tour, without missing a performance of the fabulously successful production.

Carol has been working every week in the entertainment world since 1950, when she scored mightily singing "Diamonds Are A Girl's Best Friend" on Broadway in "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes."

Big, blonde, brassy and supremely talented, Carol attracted immediate attention. It didn't come easy, however. When Carol tried Broadway for the first time, after graduating from Bennington, she was in a series of flops, so she went back home to Los Angeles. There she won a part in the West Coast revue, "Lend An Ear," which was directed by her good friend Gower Champion.

Before long she was back on Broadway in "Blondes," a big hit, after which came night clubs, television, a command performance for the late President Kennedy, and finally her Tony award-winning role in "Hello, Dolly!"

Carol made musical history by bringing in $17,015,018 in 1,272 consecutive performances of the show.

What enabled Carol to play "Dolly" those 1,272 times without a break? Says Carol:

"When I was in 'Gentlemen Prefer Blondes' the Lunts came backstage, and then we talked until two in the morning. They said 'You must find out what agrees with you and stick to it. You must train like a boxer.'"

"I took my cook, Emily, on the road and ate only her food, which is cooked simply. You can't do eight shows a week on rich food. I have an allergic reaction to spices and meat tenderizer. I never got tired — you don't when the show is rolling with you. We covered every city we possibly could and it was the most rewarding thing I've ever done — that's where the theater is really appreciated — on the road.

"I had bronchitis in North Carolina, but I explained it to the audience and they were so understanding. They brought me home remedies. One woman brewed an herb tea for me in my dressing room. In Miami I hurt my toe and had to perform barefoot for a week. They didn't mind. They just want you to be there."

Carol, who has been called "the blitz blonde with the clown-doll eyes," has the air of a frisky kitten on stage. Offstage, she's just as warm and friendly, but her comic, flighty mannerisms are underlaid by a vein of seriousness.

She is a wise, as well as funny, kitten.

Before achieving success as a performer, Carol worked as a model, receptionist and salesgirl. Today, she values that success, and she values the happy family relationship she has with her son Channing, and with her husband and executive producer, Charles Lowe.

Alan Handley and Bob Wynn are producers of "Carol Channing and 101 Men," with Handley also directing. Other production credits include: Milt Rosen, writer, with special material by Goodman Ace and Charles Gaynor; E. Jay Krause, associate producer and art director; Harper MacKay, musical director; musical numbers choreographed and conceived by Hermes Pan; and Ray Agnayan, costume designer.

Films Had Music Before 'Talkies'

Theme music was being written for motion pictures long before the screen found a voice. This piece of Hollywoodiana was noted by George Sidney, one of Hollywood's great directors of musicals.

"Back in the silent days," Sidney recalled, "there was music with all films, but it did not, of course, come from the screen. It came from the piano player stationed at the side of the screen. He tried, by keeping one eye on the unreeling film, to follow the action with appropriate music, much of which he himself invented on the spot, or from themes suggested by the distributors of the film."

Sidney pointed out that theme music was first written for a film as far back as D. W. Griffith's "Birth of A Nation," in 1915, but that it was rarely used because most movie house piano players were unable to read music. They played by ear. In fact, this particular song wound up some years later as the theme for "Amos n' Andy" radio show.

Theme music received a tremendous boost by the advent of radio and recordings. Movie companies discovered they could make theme songs for films popular via these mediums and thus induce people to see the films. Music became so important to films in the early 1920s that theaters began engaging huge symphony orchestras to play the theme music while the film unreeled on the screen.

By the mid-twenties, every film boasted a scene which would key the theme music, whether it was a song being mouthed silently by the star, or a dance. When Mae Murray and John Gilbert waited in "The Merry Widow" the scene was given life by the orchestra playing the famous melody to the exact tempo of their dance on screen.

All of this changed one exciting night, in 1927, when Al Jolson's voice was heard coming from the screen itself, singing "Mammy" and "Kol Nidre" in "The Jazz Singer." The screen had finally found a voice and a singing one at that. But it was not until almost two years later that music literally burst from the screen, in the first "all talking, all singing, all dancing" motion picture, "Broadway Melody," starring Bessie Love, Anita Page and Charles King. This rocked the industry to its foundations, for it ushered in the age of the musical, which has continued to the present. Next big musical was "Hollywood Revue," which is notable for the fact that among its chorines was a pretty newcomer named Jean Crawford.

There followed a spate of musicals in the thirties, most of them revues and so-called back-stage musicals, with titles like "Goldiggers of Broadway," "Paramount on Parade," "Fox Movietone Follies," and others, most of them simply an excuse to exploit studio contract talent. It may now seem difficult to believe, but one of the young men on the chorus of "Paramount on Parade" was named Gary Cooper.

Studios discovered some of their great silent stars could carry a tune and immediately the billboards screamed: "Hear Ramon Navarro Sing." But others lacked even a good speaking voice, like John Gilbert, and their careers came to a sudden end. The industry was going through a revolution and many got hurt in the changeover to sound.

But this era of the musical did produce some extraordinary new talent, including Nancy Carroll, Clara Bow, Sue Carol, Helen Kane, Marlene Dietrich, Janet Gaynor, Buddy Rogers, Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell and others. Bing Crosby made his name in this era, appearing on screen for the first time in Paul Whiteman's "The King of Jazz" which also featured George Gershwin's great jazz classic, "Rhapsody in Blue."

By the mid-thirties, however, the public had become so surfeited with musicals they stayed away in droves and movie companies began advertising new films in this fashion: "This Is Not A Musical." The cycle, everyone said, had run its course. Warner Brothers refused to believe this and continued with the most lavish of all musicals. It was "42nd Street" and it proved a blockbuster and the musical rush was on again.

Musicians in Pit Played Major Role in 'Silents'

This heralded the beginning of the spectacular, with lines of gorgeous, scantily-clad girls, glittering sets and production numbers dazzling beyond belief.

This era produced such stars as Betty Grable, Eleanor Powell, Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, Nelson Eddy and Jeannette MacDonald, to name but a few.

Although Hollywood had discovered the musical was universally popular, no other country seemed able to produce them. It was something that was unique to the genius of Hollywood. Not even England, despite its proud record of good films, was able to turn out a really first-class musical, though the few that starred Jessie Matthews were fair.

'Hello, Dolly!' Opens Milwaukee Run Nov. 20

MILWAUKEE — "Hello, Dolly!" will open an eight-performance run at the Palace Theater here Monday, Nov. 20, as the second attraction of the 1967-68 Theater Guild season. Ginger Rogers will star.

Miss Rogers is one of the many in the ever-growing roster of famous stage and screen stars to find the role of Dolly Gallagher Levi in "Hello, Dolly!" irresistible. Miss Rogers, one of Hollywood's most popular and glamorous personalities, will portray the merry matchmaker when David Merrick presents his smash musical hit, directed and choreographed by Gower Champion. Theatergoers here had their first glimpse of "Hello, Dolly" some two years ago with Carol Channing in the role of the merry matchmaker.

Never in the history of the musical theater have so many top feminine stars signified their willingness to play a role created by another star. Since "Hello, Dolly" and Miss Charning first cast their spell on Broadway audiences more than three years ago, such famous Broadway and Hollywood names as Mary Martin, Dorothy Lamour, Betty Grable and Eve Arden have headed companies of the musical hit; and Pearl Bailey has succeeded Miss Grable in New York.

As most everyone knows by now, "Hello, Dolly" was the unprecedented winner of 10 "Tony" Awards, and the choice of the New York Drama Critic's Circle as "Best Musical of the Year." Its title song has become the most popular ever written for a musical, and has been recorded by almost every top singing star, including the legendary Louis Armstrong. The show itself has achieved international prominence.

Adapted by Michael Stewart from Thornton Wilder's comedy, "The Matchmaker," and with music and lyrics by Jerry Herman (whose most recent Broadway success is "Mame"). "Hello, Dolly's" sets were designed by Oliver Smith; its costumes were created by Freddy Witkop; and Jean Rosenthal was in charge of lighting.

With Miss Rogers in the national company of "Hello, Dolly!" are Coley Wortham, noted comedian actor, as Horace Vandergelder, the penurious merchant of Yonkers, who is the object of Dolly's matrimonial machinations; Mary Nettem as Irene Molly, the pretty milliner; Bill Mullikin as Cornelius Hackl, Vandergelder's Chief clerk; and the singing and dancing chorus.

Ticket prices being at $6.50 for upper balcony and run up to $7.50 for center balcony and $8.50 for orchestra and mezzanine. Tickets may be secured for any performance, including matinees Thanksgiving Day and Saturday. Address for ticket inquiries is Palace Theater, 537 W. Wisconsin Ave., Milwaukee, Wis. 54203. Matinee prices are $1 cheaper.

LBJ Will Continue Fight Mansfield Predicts Bigger Tax Request

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen- ate Democratic leader Mike Mansfield expects no dramatic, election-year legislative propos- als from President Johnson in 1968, but predicts the President will press his fight for a tax hike if he doesn't get it in the current session.

The Montana senator said Fri- day the second session of the 90th Congress may be much like the first—which still is weeks from adjournment.

"I think on the Senate side it has been a responsible, stop, look and listen session," Mans- field told newsmen. He said the Senate has approved much of what President Johnson re- quested.

More Representative But he acknowledged that the House, which has pressed bud- get-cutting demands and balked at the size of the proposed anti- poverty program, may be more representative of the American mood now than the Senate.

"You may not like what they're doing," Mansfield said, "but it's quite possible that they reflect very accurately what the people are thinking."

Mansfield said the current session of Congress probably will adjourn at mid-December —probably without acting on the $7 billion tax increase President Johnson seeks on the basis it would combat inflation.

"I feel he'll ask for a tax in- crease next year if he doesn't get it this year," Mansfield said. "If we don't face up to it this year, we'll have to do it next year when it will be far worse. It will be more unpopu- lar. It may well be a bigger tax increase."

The President is now seeking a 10 per cent surcharge on in- come taxes.

$8 of 100 Mansfield said the Senate has approved 83 of 100 Johnson propo- sals which have come before it.

But that accounting includes some relatively minor legisla- tion. And there are some contro- versial items on the docket Mansfield outlined for the month ahead.

One of them, civil rights legis- lation is likely to ignite a South- ern filibuster. That bill, one sec- tion of the broader legislation the administration sought, bill at a plush golf club

City Finds Old Bridge, New Question

WISCONSIN RAPIDS (AP) — An antique bridge has emerged from under its earthen shroud long enough to perplex Wiscon- sin Rapids historians and to suggest a task for archeologists before returning again to its grave.

Sewer construction crewmen, digging to locate a pipeline, found the arched, stone, culvert- like bridge buried more than seven feet under Oak Street earlier this month. The city has been unable to determine who built it, or when.

The masonry handiwork ap- pears to be a century or more old. It still faithfully spans the near-dry bed of an underground creek. The original course of the stream can be traced on ancient city maps, but no map shows the bridge.

No Reference Nor do city records indicate there was a bridge or culvert at the site. Historical volumes make no reference to it, and pictures filed in the local li- brary, and dating to 1880 show scenes of the intersection — but no bridge.

The bridge, at some uncertain date, was buried by earth fill capped over the years by three layers of street paving.

A city engineer, Frank Drax- ler, said the stonework must be returned to the past with ques- tions unanswered. To complete the sewer project, he said, the construction cavity must be filled in and the bridge re- buried.

OUR 34TH YEAR!

Film-Making Moving Outdoors

By Halsey Raines

LONDON — The prospective sites for film-making in Britain's capital these days would seem to range from any of 26,109 streets and 3,476 pubs to an almost endless number of slightly redecorated shops or homes, not forgetting six big parks and 14 bridges across the Thames.

At least this is the pattern which Paramount followed during the busy summer of 1967.

The conventional big studio stages, long the stronghold of cine-manufacture, haven't vanished from the scene in England — far from it — but a new kind of movie technique is giving them a competitive race.

The 178 principal "shots" for "Smashing Time," a comedy co-starring Lynn Redgrave and Rita Tushingham, were made in a wide variety of interior and exterior locations around Greater London. Not one scene was filmed within studio walls.

"Up the Junction," the work of a 28-year-old director, Peter Collinson, who first focused attention on himself with the startlingly offbeat psychological drama, "The Penthouse," was made chiefly in "real locales." Only a few cut-in scenes were photographed in one of London's tiniest studios. "The Penthouse," in which Collinson launched an arresting new blonde actress, Suzy Kendall, as a star, was also made without the use of even a mini-studio.

The title, "Up the Junction," refers to a teeming, turbulent district of London known as Clapham Junction, and in addition to giving Miss Kendall her second starring part, Collinson selected a whole group of talented "unknowns" for this uninhibited story of young people in rebellion against the mores of a world they feel has let them down. The boy playing the male lead, Dennis Waterman, is only 19, while two other of Collinson's finds, blonde Adrienne Posta and brunette Maureen Lipman, are 17 and 18 years old.

"Up the Junction" was adapted from the book of that name by a 27-year-old no-punch-pulling writer, Nell Dunn, spiced with frank bits of local argot, and many of its scenes were made on the streets, in the pubs and time-ridden council buildings of "Junction Land," which includes adjacent Battersea. Other sequences were shot on the M-4 leading out of London, and in a picturesque part of Sussex, 40 miles to the south.

"Inadmissible Evidence," adapted from John Osborne's stage hit, has utilized quite different areas of London, especially that part of the old heart of the metropolis known as "The City." The story revolves about a lawyer of dubious background and numerous amatory experiences: and the Law Chambers, the famed Old Bailey, the old St. Paul's School, the alleyways off the Strand, and the "hide-away" hotels of Brighton all play a part in the story, with Nicol Williamson repeating the revelatory marathon-sized role of the play.

The trend seems likely to continue. "The Brides of Mrs. Blossom," starring Shirley MacLaine, utilized many London locations and a new Michael York vehicle, with a British background. "The Strange Affair," will draw from the same multitudinous vein.

The reasons for the greater swing to real life settings are several: there is increased emphasis these days on ultimate reality as opposed to cleverly counterfeited settings; there are exteriors which simply cannot be duplicated; and there are directors, like Desmond Davis of "Smashing Time," and Peter Collinson of "Up the Junction," or such producers as Tony Richardson of "Inadmissible Evidence," (who romped around rural England with "Tom Jones") who feel that the informality and flexibility of a unit working on "roving sets" gives greater freedom to a project and a lift to the whole personnel.

So in moviedom these days, all the world's a stage, and nowhere more than in the land of the playwright who penned those words in "As You Like It."

Norman Wisdom Prefers Not Being Recognized

NEW YORK (AP) — Norman Wisdom strolled a few blocks along Broadway the other day and not a head turned. He's out to change that.

A year ago, Wisdom abandoned a stage and movie career in London that had made him a top box-office comedian in virtually every part of the world to take on the one country where he is still unknown—the United States.

Outside of those who saw him in the Broadway musical, "Walking Happy," and the few who catch him on the late-late show, audiences here haven't been exposed to his "little man" character. But things may begin to change next Wednesday night when the 5-foot-4 Wisdom plays the lead in an NBC television musical adaptation of George Bernard Shaw's "Androcles and the Lion." He also plays a burlesque comic in "The Night They Raided Minsky's," a movie in production here.

"It feels like starting all over again, and I'm enjoying it," Wisdom said. "I'm enjoying the challenge."

He has a country home in Sussex, England, and a half-million dollar yacht, but he's living in a small New York apartment, just like any other hopeful, because "it's more conducive to the feeling of starting out new."

Wisdom admits, of course, that it's much easier now than it was 21 years ago when, at age 23 and fresh out of the army, he was begging for a chance to go on the stage of a North London music hall.

"That's because I've got the experience now," he said. "At Collin's Music Hall I had to go on and learn my job. Now I know my job, but I've still got a lot to learn."

NBC's musical version of Shaw's whimsical comedy about the man who pulled the thorn from the lion's paw will feature a score by Richard Rodgers, of "South Pacific" and "Oklahoma" fame. Joe Layton, who has directed all of Barbra Streisand and specials, is director and choreographer of the 90-minute show.

The cast includes Noel Coward as the emperor, Geoffrey Holder as the lion, Ed Ames as Ferrovius and Inga Swenson as Lavinia. Wisdom said his role as Androcles is somewhat of a continuation of his sad little man roles. "Yet at the same time," he said, "Androcles wants to become a Christian martyr, but he's always frightened. Occasionally he will stand up and say he will die."

Wisdom sees a certain irony in his starting out here as an unknown in a Shaw play. In England where he is famous he said "I would never be cast in a Bernard Shaw play, and I'm not sure there's all that much difference in a Bernard Shaw play and what I've done."

His characterization at times has been compared to Charlie Chaplin and to Stan Laurel. Wisdom doesn't mind too much but "I'd rather be the first Norman Wisdom any day than the second Charlie Chaplin."

He has performed at seven command performances for Queen Elizabeth II, and numerous times at private parties at Windsor Castle.

"Once," he said, "I was bowing and backing up after a performance at Windsor Castle and I backed into some rather expensive flower pots and broke them."

"Everyone was aghast and there was this awful silence until I said, 'It's all right, I'll pay for any damage.' That broke the ice."

Have We Simply Lost Barbra?

By David F. Wagner

Simply Streisand (Barbra Streisand, Columbia).

Seemingly having read the critics who wearied of her "shouting," Barbra soft pedals her current annual package, and manages to be vibrant without producing ecstasy or reverie. It's middle of the road material and performances, and is guaranteed not to offend or provoke. It is admirable for its craftsmanship; it is despicable for its heartlessness.

I can't help feeling we simply lost Barbra somewhere back away and now we have producers, arrangers and maybe Gene Lees' ideas on good taste, but we don't have Streisand. Worse of all, we have a pathetic parody of her most touching moment ever ("Happy Days Are Here Again") on "Stout-Hearted Men," a thoroughly distressing track with no clear intent — possibly no meaning. It is my fervent hope that this track is simply bad judgment, but the fear that it is a parody remains imbedded in my offended sense of good taste. Arranger Ray Ellis, who should know better, and producers Jack Gold and Howard A. Roberts, who should care more, must be criticized in the severest terms.

Ultimately, however, the fault may be mine. What was passionate yesterday is casual today. Perhaps Aretha Franklin has jaded my taste for the cooler, aloof qualities of Streisand, or I may not be fully attuned to her level of expression. Nonetheless, older Streisand material still turns me on, so there must be some basis for complaint about "Simply Streisand."

Richard Rodgers' liner notes promise tears and laughter; the record neither delivers or evokes either and we are left with a café singer for whom there are no cafés or café society.

Fiddler on the Piano (Laurie Holloway Trio, Columbia).

The music from "Fiddler on the Roof" has been among my favorites for both show and ballad tunes. This inventive and tasty set based on those songs is, therefore, very entertaining for me. Listeners who think they don't like jazz might want to try this one, for its easy, light attitudes. Jazz fans will also approve of it for its tight musical production and sharp arrangements. Joining Holloway's piano stylings are drummer Barry Morgan and bassists Joe Mudele and Ken Baldock, who alternate.

Stan Getz & Arthur Fiedler at Tanglewood (Boston Pops, Fiedler, conductor, RCA).

Among the various albums the Boston Pops has recorded with top solo stars, this would rate as one of the best. Getz's sophisticated tenor sax and the superlative Pops strings go well together. The highlights are a 15:22 "Tanglewood Concerto" and a 10:30 "Three Ballads for Stan," mostly because their length allows for much imagination on Getz' part. The jazz saxist is augmented by four top-rate contemporaries: Jim Hall, guitar; Gary Burton, vibes; Roy Haynes, drums, and Steve Swallow, bass. This lp is every bit as good as Fiedler's work with Duke Ellington and Peter Nero, both tremendous packages.

Love, Andy (Andy Williams, Columbia).

What should have been another artful presentation of some popular songs by a master of the form is marred by the inclusion of "Somethin' Stupid" and the failure of even the better tracks actually to ignite. But God only knows what they had in mind on "God Only Knows." The pianist plays a seemingly unrelated Bachian etude while Andy struggles with the melody — a big mistake. He does a bit better on "The Look of Love," "What Now My Love" and "There Will Never Be Another You."

Mariano and the Unbelievables (Capitol).

The only unbelievable aspect of Mariano's crew is the tardiness with which they entered the baroque rock bag. Waiting until its popularity has waned is either daring or stupid. Unless the versions are sparkling enough to revive interest (and these aren't), it will be a failure as an lp. "Wack Work" is one exception to the baroque flavorings, and "Georgy Girl" and "Sunshine Superman" are also agreeable.

Woody Live-East and West (Woody Herman, Columbia).

Woody and his Swingin' Herd are so much more enjoyable on this than on their "Jazz Swinger" lp (in which Woody sang), that it's worth shouting about. I know there were critics who felt Herman's singing was good, but to hear the Herd playing just snappy swing jazz the way it was written makes me wonder why some critics are so easily amused. Most of the tracks were recorded at the Riverboat Room in New York City, the best of which is "Tomorrow's Blues Today." Three numbers were taken from an appearance at Basin Street West, San Francisco. Of those, "I Remember Clifford" stands out.

The Comedy of Errors (Shakespeare Recording Society, Caedmon 2-Record Set).

The latest in the series of Shakespeare plays on Caedmon features Alec McCowen as Antipholus of Syracuse, Anna Massey as Adriana, Harry H. Corbett as Dromio of Syracuse and Finlay Currie in the important role of Aegeon, the merchant. Directed by Howard Sackler, the play takes less than 90 minutes. Although not one of Shakespeare's highly-touted works, "Errors" provides the company with the opportunity to assemble another skillful production.

The Robbs (Mercury).

The Robbs' present sound was apparently formulated during late 1965 and early 1966, when many groups, even the Beatles, but especially newer ones, were heavily Byrd-influenced. The Robbs still exhibit this at once limiting but adaptable format. Six of the 10 songs on the long-overdue debut album of the Milwaukee quartet are Dee Robb originals. Of them,

"Race With the Wind" is probably the best. However, one side of their current single, "Violets of Dawn," the eternally enchanting Eric Andersen song, is better than any other tracks on all accounts. Also included are "Cynthia Loves," "Girls, Girls," "Bittersweet" and "Rapid Transit," each a single hit in this area.

The Ray Bryant Touch (Cadet).

That touch of which the title speaks is tuff, in the traditional "soul jazz" way, on "Little Suzie" and "You Keep Me Hangin' On," and light, in the typical "cocktail jazz" manner, on "This Is All I Ask" and the Beatles' "And I Love Her." Pianist Bryant is steady in his album quality, and this session, recorded live at Los Angeles' Memory Lane, is one of the better efforts.

Pandemonium Shadow Show (Nilsson, RCA).

You wouldn't believe the promotional packaging this fellow got to drum up interest in his work. He's backed with a big sound on some tracks, probably to diminish the fact that his own sound is very small. Most interesting offering is "You Can't Do The Montage of Excerpts Beatle songs. Yet his w indicates he does not ap ready to try any really a turous stuff, preferring to to tried and hopefully forms.

Ed Sullivan Presents the Last Two People in World: Jerry Stiller & Anne Meara (Columbia).

Sullivan had a great deal to do with the popularity of this husband-wife comedy team, so I suppose he has the right to present them on an album. The characters of Hershey Horowitz and Mary Elizabeth Doyle, a couple brought together by a computer with an offbeat sense of humor, are very well known through appearances on Sullivan's show, but Stiller and M have more to their co repertoire, including ("Ditto Mary Elizabeth Doyle") and other ro ("Adult, Adult Movies," man Commercial"). This even funnier than the who presented it.

Album Potpourri:
Eydie Gorme's Greatest Hits (Columbia). From the Grammy winning "If He Walked Into My Life" to the bright "Blame It on the Bossa Nova," Eydie's talents get a choice showcase here. Adding even more punch to the set are "Softly, as I Leave You," "Matchmaker," "Don't Go to Strangers," "Amor," "What Did I Have That I Don't Have?" and three more.

The Maids Hold On (Mercury). This Chicago quintet had a medium-sized hit called "Hold On" (an inferior version of Sam and Dave's "Hold On, I'm Coming") recently, so now it's Mercury Records' job to make the young men appear far more significant than they are. The title track is poorer than the other performances, but their "Knock on Wood" and "Mercy, Mercy, Mercy" (the latter with different lyrics and arrangements) fall short of others I have heard in the pop and r&b fields.

The Jungle Book (Movie Soundtrack, Disneyland). Some of the dialogue and music from the Walt Disney film soon to make the rounds of area theaters should have great appeal for the kids. With voices by Phil Harris, Sebastian Cabot, Louis Prima, George Sanders and Sterling Holloway combined with music by the Sherman brothers, Robert B. and Richard M., this can't miss.

Latin Hits I Missed (Edmundo Ros, London). Among those that slipped by Ros' eagle eye were "Carnival,"

"Spanish Flea," "The P Vendor," "Tico-Tico," "ped Cream," "It Happen Monterey" and "La Ban Let's keep the old eyes more next time, Edmund Today My Way (Patti LaBelle, Columbia). Patti does fairly good songs ("Sleep in the Subway," "Goes My Everything," "Take My Eyes Off You" also is drawn into doing tripe, most notably S Posey's awful "I Tak Back" At least Patti d better performance on it.

Ray Conniff's Hawaiia hum (Columbia). It cert took Ray's singers a long to get around to I music. Judging by the rangements on such pear "Blue Hawaii," "The waiian Wedding Song" "Beyond the Reef," Ray particularly fond of the

Sir Laurence Olivier Submits to Interview

EDITOR'S NOTE — Sir Laurence Olivier, perhaps the world's greatest living actor, recently appeared in the World Arts Festival at Expo 67 in Montreal. At a news conference there, he spoke of himself—his recent bout with cancer, his plans as an actor, his views of his profession and his role as artistic director of England's National Theatre Company—and of acting and the theater in general. Here are excerpts from the news conference.

(Q). Sir Laurence, would you mind telling the anxious multitudes the state of your health at the present moment, and what are your plans for the future?

(A). Well, thank you very much for the inquiry. I think so far as they will tell you before five years is up, which is the earliest they can pronounce a cure for the cancer which I have been guilty of having, I am quite convinced that I am pretty all right. And the doctors seem very satisfied with my condition. The cure itself is the only thing now that has to be defeated. It has a lasting depressive influence on a person who is thus treated, and I hope that that will be gone in a few months and then I shall be as good as new. I hope.

(Q). What are your plans for the future, say within the next few years?

(A). I shall continue exactly as before as director of the National Theatre. I may not act quite so much for 12 months or so. I shall direct some plays and shall continue to direct the organization and company.

(Q). Sir Laurence, six months ago you reported on your feelings about the controversy of British actors appearing in the United States and vice versa. Has anything changed in the last five or six months on that particular situation, and how do you see the future about this actors' exchange and the resolution of the controversy between the respective equities?

(A). I don't see anything. I have been trying to think of something for about 40 years. I don't see any resolution that can be made on the matter. It depends entirely on the weight of foreign intrusion into the theater and I think their feelings respond to that. I think that at the moment there is an unfortunate amount of Anglican theater, having fought its way into New York. I think more people are trying to fight their way into New York. I think that causes the dissatisfaction in the American

One of the purposes of England's National Theater Company is its influence on the state of the theater in general. This was but one of the many views expressed by Sir Laurence Olivier at his recent press conference at Montreal, where he and his company are performing. On the state of his cancer infection, the actor and director said. "I am quite convinced I am pretty all right." Sir Laurence is shown in the roles from two of the Montreal presentations, as Edgar in the play "Dance of Death" (left) and as Tattle in "Love for Love." (APN Photo) actor. It is exactly the same as it was in 1929 when it all started up. It hasn't changed at all.

(Q). But why are more people trying to fight their way into New York?

(A). It's just an accident really. There is no purpose behind it. It's just that I don't think an English actor, if he gets offered an engagement in New York by some American management such as David Merrick. I don't think he pauses to consider if there are a lot of English companies already in New York.

(Q). Sir Laurence, would you tell us what you think the primary purpose of the National Theatre Company is?

(A). Yes, I think the primary purpose of the National Theatre Company is to present to its public as complete a spectrum of world drama as is humanly possible at any one time, and to maintain through its subventions an unusually high standard of performance and production of this work. I think the fact that it is called a National Theatre is, if you like, an added interest in that it might give a peculiarly national flavor, it might provide, we hope, to some extent, a little national pride and I think that's been thought to be a good thing in many other countries and mine for many, many years.

(Q). Sir Laurence, what influence, if any, would you say the cultural revolution, the 'hippie movement, the modern influence, has had on British theater, in the National Theatre's performance?

(A). Yes, it has had an influence, I would say. Has it had any influence on the National Theatre? Yes, well it's bound to. Anything of this nature, whatever people say or feel about it, it always does something to change the expression on the face of a nation's cultural personality. It does something to change. It has an effect. You can't say precisely what, but if you try to ignore its existence you would look like an old hat in about six months time. You can't ignore its existence.

(Q). Do you ever act for fun?

(A). No. No. I don't really enjoy it very much. I just can't stop doing it. It's a sort of lunacy. It's a kind of, I think acting is a kind of masochistic form of exhibitionism which was born in me and I don't seem to be able to stop.

(Q). Do you ever have happy moments in the theater as we as members of the audience when watching you have happy moments?

(A). Sometimes, but I would distrust them as valuable things. I think I am rather for the old axiom that says an artist is not supposed to expect satisfaction. I sort of nestle in that for my own comfort. I don't enjoy it very much but I couldn't not do it. Rather like a sort of old carthorse with a collar round his neck.

(Q). How can you sustain a performance night after night if you must go, run the emotional gamut every night?

(A). Of course you understand you do it. You know the difference between controlled exercise and uncontrolled exercise, and acting is a controlled exercise. You can't very well do a convincing job of feeling emotionally concerned, whichever emotion you're using, without employing a great percentage of that actual emotion. I dare say some people can, I can't. If I have to be emotionally involved in some way of grief, I have to feel it. In other ways I have to feel that, to a certain extent, of course, as I say, it's controlled. As controlled exercise. By which I mean exercise in a gymnasium is different from normally running about or walking, or whatever it is you do. If you suffer from gout, which I'm sure you don't, but if you were to walk on a gouty foot you would hurt it. If you were to do controlled exercise under a watchful monitor, or doctor, or physiotherapist, it would do it good, and that's rather like acting.

(Q). What is for you the real theater in 1967?

(A). The true theater? Lord, what is the real theater? I think it's a contradiction in terms. I think the theater is a bloody lie from beginning to end.

Szell's Usual Suavity Missing

By Jack Rudolph

ROSSINI

Rossini Overtures: La Giza Ladra, La Scala di Seta, Il Viaggio a Reims, L'italiana in Algeri, Il Turco in Italia. Cleveland Orchestra, George Szell conducting. Columbia MS 7831 (Mono ML 6431).

Aside from placing some rarely heard Rossini overtures within easy reach, this is not one of the Cleveland ensemble's better efforts. Tempos are frantic and the sound is rough. Maybe Szell took these lightly, but in any event the usual Cleveland suavity is missing.

LISZT — WAGNER

Preludes: Les Preludes (Liszt); to Lohengrin, Acts I & 3: Parsifal, Die Meistersinger. Vienna Philharmonic, Zubin Mehta conducting. London CS 6529 (Mono CM 9529).

I'm ordinarily leery of using the adjective "incandescent" but it fits this recording. Relaxed yet aglow with vitality, beautifully balanced with rich, crisp sonorities, the Wagner preludes are outstanding. The Liszt, for all its brilliance and excitement, however, is revealed for what it is — clever and empty. A rarity for London is a touch of pre-echo.

IVES

The Two String Quartets. Juilliard String Quartet. Columbia MS 7627 (Mono ML 6427).

Only Charles Ives could have come up with a pair of string quartets so completely different yet so obviously the work of the same composer. The First, his first major work, composed while he was still a Yale undergraduate, is accessible enough but the Second is a different matter — although highly interesting for all that. Both receive aggressive, sweeping performances from the Juilliard in strong, resonant sound. A very fine and valuable recording.

SHOSTAKOVICH

Symphony No. 10 in E Minor. USSR Symphony, Yevgeny Svetlanov Conducting. Melodiya - Angel SR 46625 (Mono R 46625).

The Tenth has some beautiful and exciting moments but it doesn't hold up too well. Maybe it will go down easier with repeated hearings, but the overall effect is one of fitful moods that don't hang together and fail to maintain momentum. The USSR Symphony gives it a careful, sonorous reading in excellent sound.

MOZART

Sinfonia for Strings in D Major, K 136; Divertimento No. 15 in B-Flat Major, K 287. Yehudi Menuhin, violinist, and the Bath Festival Orchestra. Angel S 36429 (Mono 36429).

Divertimenti being essentially background music for large parties, even those by Mozart fail to maintain the pace when offered as recordings unless they receive exceptional performances. In this case Menuhin and his Bath ensemble achieve all that is desired, especially in Number 13. Suave, crisp pacing and some splendid violin playing by Menuhin make this a fine record.

BALLET MUSIC FROM OPERA

William Tell (Rossini), Aida (Verdi), Samson et Delilah (Saint-Saens), Khovantchina (Moussorgsky), Paris Conservatory Orchestra, Anatole Fistulari conducting. Victor/VCS 1266 (Mono VIC 1266).

Since ballet is an imperative of French opera, French musicians have a natural flair for ballet music that is delightfully highlighted here. Steady if sometimes galloping tempos are outstanding and so are the clean lines of the varied music. The Triumphal March from "Aida" is exceptionally exciting.

Michael Callan as a brash young intern is caught in a serious moment trying to calm an hysterical patient in this scene from "The New Interns" on "ABC Sunday Night Movie."

'My Goals Are to be as Good as I Can Be'-Brown

By Gene Handsaker

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — It's overseeing college kids . . . Lending youngsters money to buy books or sneakers . . . Instilling pride, teaching economics, getting dropouts hired, staging a golf tournament — and remaining friends with Negro leaders from Black Power, advocate Rap Brown to moderate Whitney Young.

That's Brown Power—Jim Brown Power, a term Jim Brown probably would scorn—as exercised through his Negro Industrial and Economic Union.

It's also a power that made fullback Brown perhaps the greatest runner in professional football history, with lifetime records for yards gained rushing—12,312—and touchdowns scored—126—in nine seasons with the Cleveland Browns. But the football story was yesterday—1957-65. Now it's dedication to what one of his directors calls "making Jimmy Brown one hell of an actor. He's got the equipment. I think he'll make it."

On screen the 6-foot-2, 224-pounder with the 45½-inch chest and 32-inch waist conveys a quiet strength. Off-screen, discussing civil rights or his career, there's relaxed near elegance sprinkled with a jivey "like." And always a certain dignity and pride.

James Nathaniel Brown, 31, born on an islet off the Georgia coast and schooled at Manhasset, N.Y., is working on his fourth movie, "Ice Station Zebra." Brown, co-starring with Rock Hudson, plays a U.S. Marine captain in a confrontation with Russians at the North Pole.

He previously played a cavalry sergeant in a Western called "Rio Conchos." Next he was a murderer-hero in

MGM's World War II thriller "The Dirty Dozen."

More recently he played a Congolese army sergeant in the unreleased "Dark of the Sun."

He has had no dramatic training to this day.

"My training comes from listening to directors, watching actors, talking to actors, cutters, production men, publicity men, watching rushes, trying out things."

"Athletics gives you a tremendous knowledge of yourself. You learn a lot about how you function, and you can adapt that to a lot of other things," he said.

Will he be another Sidney Poitier, the Oscar-winning No. 1 Negro movie star?

"My goals are never set to be the No. 1 Negro anything," said Brown. "My goals are to be as good as I can be—emphasis on 'I.' If that puts me in No. 1, I'm thankful. If it puts me at No. 50, I'm thankful because if I've reached my potential or close to it, it means I've done a good job." Brown was asked where he figures in the civil rights movement.

"Well, I don't consider myself as basically in the civil rights movement. Indirectly I am, of course. I head an organization called the Negro Industrial and Economic Union."

"We start from point zero, which is positive, and we go up. In other words, we start out with positive movements. We don't hinge on the negative. We don't discuss what has been done to us or all the hardships we've had."

"We know there's discrimination. But are we really taking advantage of all the opportunities, resources and power we have? The answer comes out no."

"So what should be concentrated on to, like, further ourselves the fastest way possible? Should we go out and demand someone to give us something? Should we sit down and name call? Should we go out and march? Should we go out and buy a house for a hundred thousand dollars in a white neighborhood that should cost fifty just to integrate the neighborhood?"

"Or should we get together and decide on, like, developing businesses that can create jobs? Developing products that can grow into large industries? Developing jobs for young people? Developing an attitude of self help? Developing additional resources?"

Incorporated last year in Ohio as a nonprofit organization, registered in California and the District of Columbia, the union has more than 8,000 members including many Negro professional athletes. The slogan: "Produce. Achieve. Prosper."

The union's eventual goal is to be able to make low-interest loans to establish Negro-run, Negro-hiring businesses and industries in all cities.

Brown was asked if he's a member of the Black Muslims.

"No, I'm not a Muslim. I'm not a Baptist or a Methodist or a Billy Graham follower or a Mahatma Ghandi follower or a lion worshiper or a sun worshiper or a water-ski worshiper or anything like that."

"Basically, I believe in a supreme power. I believe in treating people as I would have them treat me. After that it's ceremony to me. But I give a person their right to believe, whether he's a Muslim, a Catholic, a Baptist."

Rap Brown?

"I have great rapport with Rap Brown. I have rapport with Stokely Carmichael. I have rapport with Martin Luther King. I have rapport with Whitney Young of the Urban League."

"We have dialogue because we share so many of the same things: If he (Rap) is doing some things that are gonna be negative, you tell him that. If he shows a certain courage, you tell him that. But you definitely have dialogue with him."

"The same thing I say about a Rap Brown I say about a Whitney Young. Yet Rap Brown might tell me, 'Man, he's an Uncle Tom.'

"And I'll defend him to Rap Brown like I'll defend Rap Brown to you."

And King?

"I've never believed in passive resistance. You don't hear President Johnson talk about passive resistance in Vietnam. A guy walks in here and slaps me, I'm going to slap him back. You would, too."

A Slob?

Rex as Slob and Suave Star

By William Wolf

PARIS — Can suave, dapper Rex Harrison look convincing as a slob?

Talk about challenges for actors. Harrison, whose image has been synonymous with charm, has been working hard to perfect the role of a lowly, dim-witted character in his latest picture.

"I don't give a damn about my own image," observed the star after taking a swift kick in the seat of the pants during one scene and retiring to his dressing room.

He actually plays two roles in the bedroom farce "A Flea in Her Ear," currently being shot in Paris. In addition to portraying the bumbling Poche, he is also Chandebeisse, a man of the world. The rub is that they look alike, which makes for a case of mistaken identity, and also some acting problems, since Harrison can't resort to outlandish make-up.

"It's a great challenge as an actor to look as much alike the other character and still be a different man, and I enjoy playing the part as written by the author," Harrison said.

The film he is doing for 20th Century Fox is based on the play by Georges Feydeau. Also starring are Harrison's wife, Rachel Roberts, and actress Rosemary Harris. Under direction of Jacques Charon, the comedy is being shaped into an in-and-out-of-doors romp that includes as a chief prop a revolving bed.

Harrison was obviously aware of the amount of work he needed to get the off-beat characterization down pat. In fact, at times on the first day he tried it before the cameras, he requested some visitors to leave the set.

All of the professionals involved know his penchant for working very intensively. He does not care for distractions at moments he regards as crucial. Once things began to work relatively smoothly, he was more relaxed and able to converse with visitors.

"It is also hard to have Poche go slow, while everything else gathers momentum, as must happen," Harrison added. "This is technically very difficult."

Making a French farce work can be a tricky business. Harrison was specific as to the necessary ingredients: "You need complete reality; you must be deadly serious, and you must have a sort of Gallic sense of humor and a sense of pace."

While working on his new film, Harrison has been awaiting release of his large-scale musical, "Dr. Dolittle," another Fox film. He mentioned that he is thinking about the possibility of directing a movie if he gets the right opportunity.

As for going into a stage play on Broadway, Harrison disclosed something that might seem surprising considering his stature.

"I rarely get many plays sent to me," he said. One might think that people would be beating at his door with plays they hoped he would do.

"I'm not interested in most of the plays being written," he asserted. "I don't like sick theater very much."

Reagan Demands Victory in Vietnam

ALBANY, Ore. (AP) — California Gov. Ronald Reagan, in one of his most thorough statements yet, told the American people why he believes it is time to recognize the great immorality of sending our neighbors' sons to die with us in Vietnam. He said the war is a throwback to those jungle tribes sacrificing a few of their select young on a heathen altar to keep the volcano from exploding.

He added, "Isn't it time that we either win this war or tell the American people why we can't? Isn't it time to recognize the great immorality of sending our neighbors' sons to die with us in Vietnam? Isn't this a throwback to those jungle tribes sacrificing a few of their select young on a heathen altar to keep the volcano from exploding?"

Reagan then called for "victory" in the war and said this means to him: "First, an end to North Vietnam aggression, and second, an honorable and safe peace for our South Vietnam neighbors. We have been patient long enough and our patience wears thin. This is the way to peace and it is a way in keeping with our basic principles."

The governor pointed out that Americans have been fighting wars for a long time, "and yet, there was no fire. The at this dismal juncture, some-girl was rushed in critical condition in a police patrol car to unwilling to bring to terms, or Summer Memorial Hospital force to an armistice, a ram-shackle water buffalo economy state Baptist Hospital in Nashville with a gross national budget hardly equal to that of Pasadena."

The governor made clear his belief that giving up would be town.

7-Year-Old Girl Saves Self in Fire

GALLATIN, Tenn. (AP) — Barbara Douglas, 7, kept cool Saturday after her clothing caught fire while she was alone at her home here.

With her pajamas ablaze, she started running a tub of water, angering the fire department and then jumped in the filled tub to douse the blaze.

"She's the bravest girl I've ever seen," said Capt. O. Z. Taylor of the Gallatin Fire Department, who answered the little girl's desperate alarm.

Taylor explained that the girl's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ben Douglas, were visiting relatives nearby, leaving Barbara in the house alone.

"She said she was trying to fry an egg when the grease caught fire," Taylor said. The flames spread to her pajama sleeve.

By the time firemen arrived, he said, there was no fire. The girl was rushed in critical condition in a police patrol car to Summer Memorial Hospital, where she was transferred to Mid-shackle water buffalo economy state Baptist Hospital in Nashville with a gross national budget hardly equal to that of Pasadena.

The governor made clear his belief that giving up would be town.
